47 Lost in Sea Crash; Mohawk Gets Blame; Federal Inquiry Sped

31 Bodies Recovered in Sinking Off Jersey; Hunt Continues.

Talisman Skipper Describes Tragedy

Asserts Liner Crossed Bow; Steering Gear Went 'Haywire.'

(Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.)

New York, Jan. 25.—Forty-seven lives appeared lost tonight as the Federal Government rushed an inquiry into the sinking of the Ward liner Mohawk off the Jersey coast last night.

Of the 163 persons aboard the $2,000,000 Mohawk when she left her New York pier bound for Havana, the latest tally gave the following disposition:

Rescued—116.
Bodies recovered—31.
Died after rescue—1.
Unaccounted for—15.

Throughout the day and into the night, Coast Guard craft plied around the scene of the sinking seeking bodies. Overhead, the U. S. Navy blimp K-1, with Comdr. Charles E. Rosendahl in charge, circled about. From them came the grim words:

"Nothing sighted."

Inquiry Opens Today.

Determined to learn why the Mohawk and the Norwegian freighter Talisman collided off Sea Girt in a calm sea on a clear night, the U. S Steamboat Inspection Service ordered its inquiry to open tomorrow morning at the Customs House.

United States Attorney Martin Conboy also indicated the Federal grand jury would investigate.

The disaster puzzled mariners. The investigators had this question uppermost in their minds:

Why did the two ships, both southbound out of New York, collide almost prow to prow?

From surviving crew members of the Mohawk, there came the statement the liner's steering apparatus went "haywire" after the ship had hove to below Ambrose Lightship to calibrate its compass.

Skipper Blames Mohawk.

After the freighter came back to port today—carrying no survivors from the Mohawk, a fact which only intensified the fear all those not rescued by the liners Algonquin and the Limon were lost—Capt. Edmund Wang, master of the Talisman, blamed the Mohawk for the collision.

The Mohawk, a much faster ship than the Talisman, left its pier after 4 p. m. yesterday, an hour before the freighter departed.

After the Talisman dropped her pilot at Sandy Hook, Capt. Wang said he and his second officer, Olaf Naansted, were on the bridge.

"A lookout was stationed forward, the night was clear," the freighter's master said.

"The Talisman was steering a course of nearly south and was headed to pass the Barnegat Lightship on the Talisman's starboard. The lightship was some 15 miles ahead.

"The Mohawk was observed a mile or two distant on the Talisman's starboard quarter. She was overtaking the Talisman on the Talisman's starboard side.

Ran Across Talisman Bow.

"The Mohawk was going much faster than the Talisman and drew abreast of her and then ahead.

"As the Mohawk was drawing ahead she suddenly sheared sharply to port and ran directly across the Talisman's bow, nearly at right angles.

"The Talisman at once reversed her engines and starboarded her helm in order to swing to port but the Mohawk came directly in front of her bow at high sea.

"The Talisman's stem came into contact with the Mohawk's port bow 40 or 50 feet from the Mohawk's stem. The Mohawk's speed swung the Talisman around to east and then both vessels parted almost at once.

"The Mohawk's stern turned and directed her course toward the shore and the Talisman followed

"The Talisman sent out wireless calls for help and messages were exchanged between the Mohawk and Talisman. Steamers Limon and Algonquin came up and picked up those who were in the Mohawk's lifeboats. A Coast Guard cutter also assisted.

"The Talisman stood by to give help and remained all night cruising about and looking for survivors. She was the last vessel to leave the scene."

What happened on the bridge of the Mohawk?

Mohawk's Master Missing.

To this, early tonight, there was no answer. The Mohawk's master, Capt. J. E. Wood, was among the missing. Apparently, he went down with his ship.

Chief Officer Cort M. Pederson, of the Mohawk, said his ship—which the Ward Line had only recently chartered from the Clyde Mallory Line, both are subsidiaries of the A. G. W. I. line—had hove to below Ambrose Lightship to calibrate

Captain Went Down With His Ship, Survivors' Graphic Stories Reveal

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—Through blanched, trembling lips, survivors helped piece together tonight the crazy patterns of a frigid nightmare at sea.

They told of seeing the liner Mohawk rise up on its nose and plunge straight down to the bottom with valiant men still aboard her.

They told of seeing Capt. Joseph E. Wood, master of the Mohawk, standing fearlessly on the bridge with a company of his men as the downward plunge began.

They told of agonizing cries for help from the water as men floundered in the paralyzing sea.

They watched a couple of hopeless figures, pinned against the rigging, ride into the icy waters.

"I don't know whether they were picked up," said Carlo Ricca, a steward.

Two Men Killed By Collision.

For two men at least, death came with merciful suddenness. They were on the forecastle deck when a phantom-like prow loomed up "out of nowhere" and crushed them.

The same irresistible prow crunched through the Mohawk's plates, leaving a great gaping hole through which the water poured with sickening force.

There had been sharp blasts from the Mohawk's whistle—the "watch out for a collision" warning—but it came too late

A shudder surged through the great steel frame of the Mohawk and she began to heel over. Her wireless flashed out an S O S. Orders were barked from the bridge. Passengers grabbed up whatever heavy clothing was at hand and pushed out of warm salons into the wintry night.

Music Stops Suddenly.

Stewards, officers and seamen sprinted across icy decks to their emergency stations. They halted now and again to help a passenger over the slippery surface—to reassure another.

The four-piece orchestra stopped in the midst of "I Saw Stars" and joined the hurried march to the lifeboats.

"Women and children first," came the cry from all sides.

Below decks the few passengers who had retired to their cabins were roused by the crash and the sound of scurrying feet. They hurried above, leaving most of their belongings behind.

Down in the pantry pots and pans flew in every direction around the head of Steward David Cepida.

"There was no panic," said Eddie De Waard, leader of the orchestra. "Everyone was just running around, shouting to friends, trying to get life preservers on, and warm clothes. The crew ordered everyone to the boats.

"First the Mohawk tipped far over to the starboard. There was snow piled up under the lifeboats. Some boats on the port side

Armed Band Seizes Parish, Defies Long

Courthouse Stormed by Inflamed Citizens at Baton Rouge.

Secret Group Abandons Building Mysteriously After 5 Hours.

Baton Rouge, La., Jan. 25 (U.P.).—A raid on the Baton Rouge Parish courthouse by more than 400 armed men and women who said they had "gone to war against Senator Huey Long's dictatorship" ended tonight as silently and mysteriously as it began.

The raiders held siege on the courthouse for five hours and abandoned it shortly before 9 p. m. State authorities made no attempt to rout them, although National Guardsmen in uniforms and carrying side arms were seen gathering at Jackson Barracks in New Orlans.

Thodor O'Rourke, an unofficial spokesman for the citizens' army, said "we heard rumors that Long's police were getting ready to arrest about 53 of us on charges of conspiracy to kill Long, and we came down here to dfend ourselves."

Abandon Siege in Silence.

After settling down for a siege in corridors of the building and ejecting two of Long's State officials, the citizens' army filed out of the courthouse without comment. Reporters were kept at a distance, but one unidentified leader was heard telling the raiders:

"It appears that they weren't going to arrest any of us for trying to kill Long after all, so you can all go home now. We will call you again if we need you."

Men and women, carrying shotguns and pistols, were in the crowd. Some of the men were identified as members of the Square Deal Association, a new anti-Long faction which is organizing all over the State along military lines to fight Long. There have been frequent threats of a march on the State capital, but tonight's uprising was the first display of firearms in the Louisiana political wars for more than a year.

Plot to Kill Long Reported.

Authorities said a plot had been discovered to waylay Senator Long on the highway between Baton Rouge and New Orleans this evening and kill him. None would confirm the report officially.

Long sped from the city by automobile during the afternoon and reached New Orleans safely.

Long went on the air for a "share-the-wealth" speech soon after he reached New Orleans. He made no mention of the revolt or the reported attempt on his life.

Many of the citizen raiders were recognized as members of the Square Deal Association, a new faction that has sprung up in the past two weeks to oppose Long. There are Square Deal "companies" in a dozen cities, but there was nothing to connect them with the courthouse raid. Ernest Bourgeois, Square Deal president, refused to comment on the situation.

One report was that ten armed men had been arrested by State policemen near the Baton Rouge airport, on the highway, where Long's car was to pass. Another was that a Baton Rouge policeman had arrested a man trying to get into Long's hotel "to kill the kingfish."

A battle over the courthouse had loomed since yesterday, when Long enforced one of his new dictatorship laws and named a new police jury to govern the parish. The old jury, elected by the people, decided it would not recognize Long's jury. Sheriff R. L. Pettet was ordered to defend the building for the peoples' jury.

Senate Foes Join to Curb Works Plan

Minority Parley Today to Shape Fight; Glass' Attitude Feared.

Ickes and Hopkins May Be Called Before Committee.

A rising swell of opposition to the unprecedented powers and "lump-sum" provisions in the President's $4,880,000,000 works and relief bill yesterday faced that measure in the Senate, where minority forces are organizing to demand substantial changes.

Republican opposition to the bill will crystallize at a G. O. P. Senate conference this morning, summoned by Senate Minority Leader Charles L. McNary. The conference is a forerunner to formal committee consideration of the measure Monday.

Leaders plainly were concerned over prospects of enacting the history-making appropriation in precisely the same form it passed the House.

Glass May Balk.

There was indication Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, which has the measure in tow, may balk at the last minute.

Senator James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina, White House confidant, and assistant to Glass on the Appropriations Committee, was insistent, nevertheless, that the bill will be "recognizable" when the Senate gets through with it. Byrnes from the outset has stood out against "tying any strings" to the President's power to dispense the fund.

If the Senate Republican conference this morning follows the advice of its leader, Public Works Administrator Ickes, Federal Relief Administrator Hopkins and heads of half-dozen other emergency agencies will be asked to appear before the Appropriations Committee and specifically state what they intend to do with this money. This word would be carried to Monday's meeting of the Appropriations Committee by minority members.

Seek an Accounting.

There is a strong Senate opposition to Ickes' Public Works Administration, and, despite word from House leaders that Ickes or Hopkins will have no final authority in handling the tremendous appropriation, a number of Senators want to call them on the carpet. An accounting on billions already appropriated would not be amiss, they point out.

"If they are not going to let us allocate these funds, the least they can do is to call Ickes, Hopkins and the rest of them up here, and make them state where all of this money is going," Senator McNary said.

Senator Glass, who has been largely silent about the "lump-sum" measure, but has not hesitated to air his differences with the Administration on banking and other matters, emphatically declared yesterday that he is "going to hold hearings, and anybody who wants to testify, can."

Senator Couzens (Republican), Michigan, who has publicly stated that the author of the measure "ought to be hanged," said he understood John Richberg and Ben Cohen wrote the bill. Donald Richberg is chairman of the President's National Emergency Council, and Ben Cohen is an attorney for the PWA, who aided in drafting the stock market control act.

When Couzens declared in the Senate that "we have orders to pass the bill," he was engaged in debate by Glass, who said:

"You have orders, but I'm not in that class."

Senate Democratic Leader Joseph

Hauptmann Charges Police Tortured Him; Lays Crime to Fisch

Hauptmann Continues His Chorus Of 'Noes' From the Witness Stand

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 25 (AP).—The commonplace-looking young man from the Bronx, Bruno Richard Hauptmann, went back to the witness stand today to continue the story the world has waited to hear ever since his arrest four months ago as the Lindbergh kidnap-murder suspect.

He was telling his jury and the greatest crowd his trial has brought to the Hunterdon County Courthouse why he is an innocent man trapped by a maze of circumstances. He was giving his explanation of those circumstances.

Hauptmann stepped quickly across the room and confidently took the witness stand soon after court convened at 10:05 a. m.

His eyes swept the courtroom speculatively as he waited for the first question of Edward J. Reilly, chief defense counsel.

Q. Where were you living at the time of your arrest?—A. At 222d street.

Q. How long had you lived at that apartment?—A. Two years.

Tells of Wife's Savings.

Q. At the time you married your wife, did she have a savings account?—A. In the Central Savings Bank. She kept on making deposits.

Hauptmann said the winter he was married he and an associate, Diebig, bought a lunch room for $900 "cash."

Q. How long were you in the lunch room business with Diebig?—A. A few weeks.

Reilly elicited the information Hauptmann sold out his interests in the restaurant at a $400 profit.

Q. In 1929 including the mortgage of $3,500 how much were you worth?—A. Approximately $9,000.

Q. What year did you enter the Wall Street market?—A. I guess it was '29.

Q. And you bought and sold stocks up until your arrest?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you meet Isador Fisch?—A. The early part of 1932; April, I guess.

Q. When did he suggest going into Wall Street?—A. It was May.

Hauptman said he liked to go to the Steiner-Rouse brokerage office "to watch the board," although he never traded there until after meeting Fisch.

Lindbergh Watches Witness.

Col. Lindbergh sat bolt upright, looking unwaveringly at the witness. Mrs. Hauptmann gazed at her husband.

Q. Did Fisch ever give you money?—A. Yes, he did.

Q. When was the first transaction you remember in which Fisch gave you money?—A. I guess it started in August, 1932, yes.

Q. Now, did Fisch visit your home?—A. Yes.

Never Saw Lindbergh's Baby, He Declares on Stand.

Handwriting Link Is Laid to Duress

State Begins Effort to Tear Down Suspect's Story.

(Copyright 1935, by the United Press.)

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 25.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann tried to find his way to freedom today across the grave of Isador Fisch.

All day he sat in the witness chair, hands folded in his lap, and denied participation in the murder of Charles A. Lindbergh, jr.

But the most startling evidence of the day hinged on the spelling of a single word, and Hauptmann's admitted ownership of a small red-covered address book in which "boat" appeared as "b-o-a-d." The point in question was that in one of the kidnap ransom notes the word was spelled "boad."

Under cross-examination by Attorney General David T. Wilentz, Hauptmann was asked to spell "boat" and did it correctly.

Wilentz flipped the address book out of his pocket and thrust it at Hauptmann.

"Did you write these figures $2.25 in this book?"

"I can't remember."

Admits Owning Book.

"You see the word 'b-o-a-d' in this book, don't you? Did you write that?"

"I can't remember?"

"This is your book, isn't it? It came from your house?"

"Yes."

Hauptmann previously admitted that Lindbergh ransom money was found in his house, his garage and his wallet. But, Hauptmann said, Fisch gave him that money three weeks before he sailed away to Germany to die.

And then Hauptmann, who has been under a hail of accusation for almost three weeks, turned and flung an accusation of his own.

The second night that he was confined in the New York police station, Hauptmann said, police took him into a room and gave him the torture of the third degree in an attempt to wring a confession from him.

Says Police Beat Him.

The tiny courtroom, with the greatest throng that has ever been here, burst into a babble of voices. Hauptmann sat in the witness chair and blinked, his hair neatly parted on the left side. His eyes glittered while he waited impatiently for lawyers to argue the legal question of whether testimony regarding the alleged "third degree" should be admitted.

It was Hauptmann himself, who slammed the one word "yes" into the record before Attorney General David T. Wilentz could choke him off.

Edward J. Reilly, chief defense counsel, was half turned away from his client, talking about something trivial, when he whirled and shot this question at the gray-clad man in the witness chair:

"When you were under arrest in New York, did the police beat you?"

Wilentz came out of his chair like a tiger, holding up one hand and yelling at Hauptmann to withhold his answer a minute.

Hauptmann stared at Wilentz, and, in a voice that rose above the court-room buzz, shouted:

"Yes."

State Objection Fails.

Wilentz's point was this:

Hauptmann gave a formal statement to Bronx authorities that he had been well treated while in their custody.

The attorney general argued that this was sufficient to clear police of any charges of brutality. Reilly replied that no one questioned the fact that Hauptmann had been well treated in the Bronx. What he was talking about was what happened before Hauptmann was transferred to the Bronx Jail—when he was in

Army Carried Mail at 'Cost' Of $3,767,355

12 Killed, 5 Badly Hurt in 66 Crashes; Report Made for Congress.

By Robert C. Albright.

With crisp, business-like charts and figures, that account for every penny of public expense, but make no reckoning for human lives, two departments of the Government have estimated for Congress the "cost" of the Army's flying the mails.

A report on that disastrous period of Army mail flying through sleet, snow and bad weather, is now before the Senate and House, over the signaturee of Postmaster General Farley. It probably will be filed away in Postoffice Committee files and forgotten.

Every emphasis was laid on a financial accounting, because that's what Congress asked for.

In dollars, Postmaster General Farley reported, the experience cost the Government $3,767,355.22, with the Postoffice and War Departments sharing the bill.

In lives, matter-of-fact accident statements discarded, the bill came to 12 killed, 9 of them pilots.

66 Mail Accidents.

There were 66 Army mail accidents in that brief period from February 19 to June 1, 1934, attached accident vouchers indicated. Besides 12 persons killed, 5 were seriously injured. For the rest, mostly minor crack-ups in landing, these routine Army reports add: "Results to personnel—None."

Under the act authorizing the Postmaster General to utilize War Department equipment, planes and

Ship Bid 'Plot' Told Johnson, Frey Charges

Blinked at Collusion, Quiz Hears; General Fails to Attend Inquiry.

(Associated Press.)

Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, former commander in chief of NRA, was accused by a witness before the Senate Munitions Committee yesterday of blinking at collusion among bidders for warship construction contracts.

Meanwhile, he failed to keep a date with the House Military Committee, looking into methods of "taking the profit out of war," and the committee, after spending 40 minutes talking politics, quit until today, when it hoped Johnson would appear.

Earlier it had heard Bernard M. Baruch, chairman of the old War Industries Board, of which Johnson was a member, assert that a wartime universal draft, affecting men, materials, capital and industry, would make the Nation "immune against attack."

Frey Accuses Johnson.

John P. Frey, president of the metal trades department of the American Federation of Labor, told the Senate committee that ten days before bids on 21 ships were opened in July, 1933, he received from Lawrence R. Wilder, a former president of the New York Shipouilding Co., a complete and accurate list of the low bids.

He took them to Johnson, he said, together with charges that major shipbuilding companies had worked out a concerted policy for dealing with the metal trades unions under the shipbuilding code.

"That's too hot for me," Frey

Senate Rejects Plan of Norris On Court Entry

Proposal for Restricting Power of President Fails, 47 to 37.

(Associated Press.)

Democratic and Republican senatorial proponents of the World Court last night were undaunted by the opposition show of strength in the vote on the Norris reservation—rejected 47 to 37—and declared the Senate would vote American adherence by next Tuesday.

The Roosevelt-opposed reservation of Senator Norris (Republican), of Nebraska, would have required Senate approval by a two-thirds vote before the United States could submit any international question to the court for settlement.

This condition or American accession was turned back yesterday by the narrow margin of ten votes, but leaders said many of the 37 who voted for the reservation would vote for ratification of the three pending protocols placing this country in the court.

Must Switch Nine Votes.

Mathematically, it means the procourt forces must switch nine votes to ratify adherence by the required two-thirds majority. But Senator McNary, the Republican leader, counted off six Senators on his side, including himself, who would vote for adherence, but who voted with Norris yesterday.

Democratic Leader Robinson also expected some of the 14 Democrats who sided with the Nebraskan to line up with the court advocates on the final roll call.

McNary did think the vote would be closer than at first thought, but

HOLC to Seek Fund Increase Of 1¼ Billion

Senate Passes RFC Extende Loan Request Exceeds Roosevelt's Aim.

(Associated Press.)

An authoritative congressional source was informed yesterday that the Home Owners Loan Corporation soon would ask Congress to add $1,250,000,000 to its available capital.

This would be $750,000,000 more than the amount to which President Roosevelt early this session suggested the figure be held.

A member of Congress, who declined to be quoted, said the request for the appropriation would be presented as soon as the measure to add two years to the life of the Reconstruction Corporation, was out of the way.

The latter passed the Senate yesterday with an amendment to broaden the corporation's powers to make loans to industry. The House Banking Committee, meanwhile, wound up hearings on the same bill and spent the afternoon working out changes.

One of the alterations would provide the liberalization of loans to industry.

Survey Conducted.

Once the bill goes before the House, it was said, the HOLC expansion will be sought. From many congressional sources there has been pressure to authorize the agency to issue more bonds. Suggestions have ranged from $1,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000.

Around $2,500,000,000 has been supplied the HOLC for home loans. But with 1,000,000 applications on file and only enough money to take

Farley Stamp 'Gift' Charges Lead to Move for House Inquiry

Postmaster General Would Be Asked Whether He Gave 'Half Million' in Rare Issues to President, Ickes and 'Friends.'

(Associated Press.)

A congressional investigation was proposed yesterday to determine whether Postmaster General Farley had given $500,000 worth of rare postage stamps to some of his philatelic friends, including the President and Mrs. Roosevelt and Secretary Ickes.

Representative Millard (Republican), New York, said he would call the attention of the House on Monday to newspaper reports that stamps worth $500,000 or more—to collectors—had been so distributed. He will, he added, seek House approval of a resolution which, in effect, would summon Farley before the House Postoffice Committee to explain.

Democratic leaders declined to comment publicly, but a high-ranking majority member of the Postoffice Committee remarked that "I hope the resolution will be adopted, because Farley shouldn't have done that."

The stamp collectors for months have envied Farley's friends. Millard asserted yesterday he understood that when a new stamp issue would come along, the Postmaster General would get a full sheet before it had been perforated for tearing, pay their face value, and give it to somebody like the President.

As he understood it, these were not to be put on the public market and nobody was to make any money out of it. There was a public complaint, however, that he autographed one sheet of what philatelists call "imperforates" for "the friend of the friend." And the "friend of the friend" sold the stamps for a sum as yet undisclosed, but reported in stamp-collecting circles to be in the thousands of dollars.

Twenty-seven philatelic societies, Millard said, had protested the Postmaster General's action. To show the result of being a "friend" of Farley, Millard said, a full set of a series of ten special National Parks stamps—not perforated—was given to Secretary Ickes. These, roughly, have a potential value of at least $60,000 to $100,000, the New Yo— $60,000 to $100,000, the New York— said he was informed.

One batch of stamps given to Ickes got into the hands of his subordinates. One valued his portion at $2,000, although he did not offer them for sale. Ickes conceded at a press conference that he had some of the stamps. When Farley was asked about that today, he replied:

"If Ickes says he's got 'em, he has."

Japanese Bomb Two Towns In Chahar, Killing 44 Chinese

Peiping, Jan. 25 (AP).—Japanese bombing planes flashed across the Chahar border today to spread death and destruction in two frontier towns, reports reaching Peiping said, as Sino-Japanese negotiators sought peaceful settlement of the border dispute.

The day's toll of Chinese dead, the reports said, was 44, 18 militiamen and five villagers dying in Tungchetze where three bombs fell and 21 militiamen and police meeting death in Tuhsikou, where the planes dropped eight bombs.

As Chahar's Chinese governor, Sung Chen-Yuan, asked the Chinese nationalist government at Nanking for instructions, some Japanese circles here said reinforcements were being brought up to strengthen the 2,000 Japanese-Manchukuan forces.

(Dispatches from Hsinking, capital of Manchukuo, said the headquarters of Gen. Jiro Minami, Japanese Ambassador to Manchukuo and commander of the Japanese garrison there, announced occupation of Tungpengtse, northeast of Tuhsikou on the disputed Chahar-Jehol frontier.)

A piece of territory 30 miles square—the only stretch of inner Mongolian territory east of the Great Wall not yet under Japanese jurisdiction—apparently was the prize at stake, and the Japanese expeditionary forces, which have used planes, artillery, armored cars, cavalry and infantry in the week's fighting, seemed determined to push Sung's troops back within the wall.

(The Hsinking reports said an advance guard of Sung's troops, the main body of which assertedly was concentrated at Tuhsikou, was dislodged as the Japanese column pushed into Tungpengtse.)

Today's death toll raised the estimated number of Chinese dead since fighting began to 90 or 100. Reports said Japanese casualties numbered 162 killed and 200 wounded.

Job Rise Sets 10-Year Record; Pay Rolls Gain $10,800,000

For the first time in ten years industrial employment in December showed an increase over November, the Bureau of Labor Statistics announced yesterday. The bureau said the net gain in December over November was 340,000, with a pay roll gain of $10,800,000.

A similar gain in December had not been reported since 1924. The gain last month was the largest since 1919. It was estimated that factory employment had increased 1.7 per cent.

Secretary Perkins pointed out that the report showed employment increases were larger in the durable goods industries than in other lines and indicated that she believed this was a significant indication of revival.

The report showed that approximately 92,000 workers had returned to employment in the transportation equipment group of industries, which include the automobile industry. Automobile factories showed an increase of 32.5 per cent in employment. While the automobile industry is seasonal and usually reaches a peak at this time of year, it was pointed out that other industries, such as canning, slump during the winter and that this slump had been offset.

A total of 31,000 more persons were employed in the textile industry, 10,000 returned to work in the leather industry, 4,000 in the paper and printing group, 3,500 in the steel industry and 3,000 in the rubber industry. The food, clay products and tobacco products industries showed declines.

The largest increase in employment was shown in Michigan, with an increase of 18.5 per cent, nearly all in the automobile industry. The second largest increase was in the District of Columbia, which was up 8 per cent. This was accounted for by unprecedented Christmas business in Washington.

President Asks Means to Curb 'Leader' Sales

Taxation Power May Be Invoked to Prevent Voluntary Loss on Cigarettes.

By Felix Bruner.

Legislation to stop "loss leader" sales by retail merchants is being considered by President Roosevelt, it was learned yesterday. While the President is emphatic in his opinion that this practice should be stopped, he has found no definite way to accomplish his purpose.

The President is particularly interested in stopping the practice of large stores in selling cigarettes and books below cost as a means of attracting customers. At the same time he has let it be known that he is in complete sympathy with efforts of Congress to stop price fixing, except as the policy applies to certain natural resources.

Discussion of the "loss leader" practice as applied to cigarettes was brought about by action of the National Industrial Recovery Board yesterday in extending until March 30 its emergency order providing that most popular brands of cigarettes shall be sold for not less than two packages for 25 cents. At the same time it was made clear that the order was based on the assumption that an emergency exists and it was indicated that it would not again be renewed. NRA officials take the attitude that an emergency can not be considered permanent.

Tax Suggested.

At the same time the NIRB was ready to transmit to the President a report on the proposed cigarette-manufacturing code. This code still is the subject of serious dispute and the NRA board will not make specific recommendations. It will be up to the President either to accept the code proposed by the industry, and opposed by labor, or to impose a code.

It was indicated that possibly the taxing power of the Government may be invoked to prevent the "loss leader" practice as applied to cigarette sales.

The question of whether the automobile code should be extended still remained unsolved, with every indication that it would go to the President. The President already has been sent a report by the research and planning division of NRA covering working conditions in the industry. The NIRB is expected to follow up the report tomorrow with a letter of comment on the findings. This probably will be followed by an invitation for representatives of the industry and of labor to confer at the White House.

Jennings Case Up.

Withdrawal of American Federation of Labor representatives from the Automobile Labor Board, set up by the President last March when labor troubles threatened the industry, added to the seriousness of the situation. Secretary Perkins revealed that William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, had notified the board of withdrawal of the federation before he had asked for a conference with the Automobile Chamber of Commerce on the question of forming a new board. The chamber of commerce declined the invitation to participate in a conference, declaring such a meeting would serve no useful purpose.

Meanwhile, W. A. Harriman, NRA executive officer, invited members of the Newspaper Industrial Board to meet with him Monday. The board has before it the case of Dean S. Jennings, discharged employe of the San Francisco Call-Bulletin. The case went back to the board this week when President Roosevelt wrote a letter to the National Labor Relations Board requesting it not to assume jurisdiction in such cases. Harriman said he intended to "explain their responsibilities" to the newspaper board, which has been deadlocked in the Jennings case.

Commenting on the letter to the National Labor Relations Board, Green yesterday upheld the national board.

"Labor holds the National Labor Relations Board in high regard," he said. "It would be unfortunate indeed if its standing or influence would be impaired."

personnel for flying the mails, Congress required the official to report back on the "cost." It was in observance of this order that the Postmaster General filed his report, incorporating statistics furnished by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, acting Secretary of War.

Farley's own statement was brief.

"The only payments made by the Postoffice Department under this act were those made to the War Department in the amount of $2,249,004.31, and I am transmitting herewith a copy of a letter with supporting charts from the acting Secretary of War, dated October 31, 1934, which sets forth in detail the cost of this service."

Accidents Described.

No mention in all of this of lives lost, or fliers injured, until the last 60 pages of the report. There the names of each flier involved in a crash is set forth, with a brief, single-sentence description of the accident and a detailed estimate of the monetary damage to engine and plane—whether a complete "washout" or repairable injury.

But the story is there, nevertheless, buried in those short flashes of description, in between the red tape.

Here are some of them:

"Crashed in take-off, due to pilot becoming confused at night."

"Pilot nosed over."

"Uncontrolled ground-loop."

"Landed with wheels up; forgot plane had retractable landing-gear."

"Ran out of gas."

"Pilot off course in bad weather; unable to locate airport."

"Hit snowdrift in landing; turned over."

"Motor failure."

"Forced landing in bad weather."

"Pilot blinded by floodlight; crashed on take-off."

List of Casualties.

Here are the casualties, likewise gleaned between matter-of-fact lines of the 66 accident reports:

Lieut. Jean D. Grenier, Air Reserve, killed with one passenger at Oakley, Utah, February 16, when he "stalled plane climbing at steep angle, at high altitude. The name of the passenger (Lieut. Edwin D. White, of March Field, Calif.), was not given.

Lieut. James Y. Eastham, Air Reserve, killed at Jerome, Idaho, February 16, when he "flew into the ground at night, under adverse weather conditions."

Lieut. Durward O. Lowry, Air Reserve, killed at Deshler, Ohio, February 22, "crash probably resulting from ice formation on wings."

Lieut. J. H. Rothrock, Air Reserve, at Rockaway, Long Island, February 23, "made forced landing on water as result of engine failure; plane sank; one passenger drowned, pilot and passenger seriously injured." The name of the dead passenger (Lieut. George F. McDermott, of Pittsburgh), was not given.

Lieut. F. L. Howard, Air Reserve, killed with one passenger at Cheyenne, Wyo., March 9, when plane "went into spin shortly after take-off." The name of the passenger (Lieut. A. R. Kerwin) was not given.

Crashes in Storm.

Lieut. Otto Weineck, Air Reserve, killed at Burton, Ohio, March 9, when he "crashed in snowstorm."

Lieut. W. H. Reid, Air Reserve, killed March 9 at Daytona Beach, Fla., when "engine failed shortly after take-off; caused crash in woods."

Lieut. H. G. Richardson, Air Reserve, killed at Cheyenne, Wyo., March 17, when "pilot went into spin at 1,500 feet and crashed."

Lieut. T. A. Wood, Air Reserve, killed at DeWitte, Iowa, March 30, when "airplane, flying low in bad weather, attempted to turn back; crashed."

Lieut. J. L. McAllister, Air Reserve, killed at Duncansville, Pa., April 5, when "pilot jumped at low altitude in thick fog; apparently lost."

The report estimated that damage to planes and engines from these and other crashes totaled $517,559, while "personal property" damage came to but $517,559.

Works Bill Mystery Solved; Where Is the Liberty League? Farley and Ickes.

By Raymond Clapper

The mystery as to who wrote the works relief bill has been cleared up. The deed was done in the Budget Bureau.

Acting Budget Director Bell obtained President Roosevelt's ideas and sat down with a Budget Bureau lawyer, who put the ideas into legal phraseology. Inasmuch as Senator Couzens has urged the hanging of the man who wrote the bill, the lawyer's name is withheld as a favor to him.

Then the bill was sent to Chairman Buchanan, of the House Appropriations Committee, to be introduced. Buchanan called a conference, which included the Budget Bureau lawyer, who wrote the bill; Middleton Beaman, House legislative counsel, and his assistant, John O'Brien; a Department of Justice lawyer, to avoid the pitfalls exposed by the Supreme Court decision in the hot oil case over excessive delegation of legislative authority; and a representative of Harry Hopkins, relief administrator. This group made some minor revisions.

President Roosevelt said recently he had not read the bill. It is understood to have been shown to him in at least one draft stage, but that does not necessarily imply that he read it.

* * * *

The House struck out a section in the works bill which would have permitted the President to postpone the termination of any existing governmental agency utilized under the works relief program. That section was opposed because members thought it was a covert plan to permit extension of NRA and PWA without obtaining the specific approval of Congress.

Actually the provision was intended to permit continuation of FERA and Subsistence Homesteads, which expire June 16, and CCC, which expires March 1. However, he still has authority to establish and prescribe the duties and functions of governmental agencies to carry out the purposes of the works bill, and to utilize and prescribe the functions of any governmental agency for this purpose.

With the aid of some hocuspocus this would seem to permit continuation of FERA, Subsistence Homesteads and CCC. The names might have to be changed slightly, for instance.

Incidentally, the purposes of the bill encompass not only relief but recovery—"relieving economic maladjustments" and "improving living and working conditions." Continuation of NRA and PWA might be deemed necessary to such purposes. Therefore, in spite of the striking out of authority to continue existing agencies, it is not certain that the House achieved its object.

* * * *

What has happened to the American Liberty League? One of its announced purposes was to combat the surrender of legislative authority to the executive, but the works bill passed the House day before yesterday and the league has not been heard from on the subject yet.

Postmaster General Farley has received the letter of apology from Secretary Ickes, whose department gave circulation to a magazine article which criticized Farley, Attorney General Cummings and Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi.

Farley replied with a brief acknowledgment.

He has long been unhappy over failure to get more patronage appointments across the desk of Ickes, especially after humoring Ickes, who is a demon stamp collector. Some months ago Ickes wanted the Postoffice Department to issue a special national parks postage stamp and Farley consented. Not only that, but Farley has sent Ickes special run sheets of new stamp issues.

There's a big row kicking up among nonprivileged stamp collectors who charge Farley with sending advance sheets of new issues, thus detracting from the value of stamps made available to private collectors.

* * * *

Despite the Ickes-Wallace controversy over the Forest Service, which Secretary Ickes wants to take over from the Agriculture Department, the two Cabinet officials left the White House arm in arm yesterday.

* * * *

The controversy between Chairman Doughton of the House Ways and Means Committee and Representative David Lewis of the same committee, who have introduced identical bills on economic security, may be solved by revamping the provisions into a new bill. In that case it would carry Doughton's name because he is committee chairman. Lewis put in the original bill and a few hours later Chairman Doughton came along with the same bill, word for word, but it was given a lower serial number, thus signifying official priority. Now Doughton is ready to compromise by substituting a revised bill of his own. It is the roughest piece of parliamentary kidnaping seen in Congress in many a day.

* * * *

Rear Admiral Christian Joy Peoples has come into prominence in the works relief program as a result of a war-time association with President Roosevelt. As Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Roosevelt was concerned with a vast amount of Navy purchases and wrangles over contracts. Admiral Peoples, then assistant chief of the Bureau of Supplies and accounts in the Navy, handled most of the business under Mr. Roosevelt's direction. They became close friends. Admiral Peoples, already having had years of experience making Navy purchases, impressed Mr. Roosevelt with his business ability.

A year ago, when the Government buildings program bogged down, Mr. Roosevelt requested the Navy to loan Admiral Peoples to the Treasury Department to take charge of this construction work. A few months ago he was set to making a survey of possible work relief projects.

Had he been willing to leave the Navy after the war, the admiral might have landed a high-salaried job in the business world as did one of his assistants, John M. Hancock, then a commander in the Navy Supply Corps. The late Julius Rosenwald, after observing Hancock in action, asked a friend how much the Navy paid him.

"Between $3,600 and $4,000," the friend replied.

"He's a $50,000 man," Rosenwald said. A few months later Rosenwald offered to make him an official of Sears, Roebuck & Co. Hancock turned it down. Instead he became a banking partner of a war-time protege of Mr. Roosevelt, Herbert Lehman, now Governor of New York.

Admiral Peoples is another such man, a bargain for the Government.

He doesn't care about his two given names and would rather have the initials used.

Tugwell Says Roosevelt Aims To Revive Faith

New Deal Is Culmination of Progressive Move, Aid Declares.

Schenectady, N. Y., Jan. 25 (AP).—Rexford G. Tugwell, Undersecretary of Agriculture, declared today that the Roosevelt Administration was seeking to restore American faith and belief in achieving economic security.

Speaking on the Spencer Foundation at Union College, his first platform appearance since he addressed the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome last November, Tugwell described the New Deal as the culmination of a progressive movement which began before the country was settled.

Declares Reforms Needed.

The crisis and depression through which the country is passing are "the direct and logical outcome of certain ways of doing things and unless we find other forms of behavior we can look forward in the future only to newer and greater crises and to more disastrous depressions, culminating finally either in political revolution or racial withdrawal," he warned, and added, "the New Deal aspires to obviate these alternatives."

The efforts of the present Administration the Undersecretary described as "a battle to determine whether the political forces of democracy are yet sufficiently wise and strong to rearrange the economic and social environment on terms which will be satisfactory to the general ethical and moral sense."

The Undersecretary described President Roosevelt as "one of a long line of statesmen who have gathered up and given shape to the desire of our people." The elections of 1932 and 1934 he described as a determination to change the terms and methods under which the American people had been living "so that they may have life and have it more abundantly."

Cites Lack of Confidence.

The political and business institutions which ruled prior to 1929 were held by Tugwell to have "blasted human life" and he attributed the decline in the American birth rate since the World War to lack of confidence in these institutions.

Tugwell, whose views have frequently been the target of criticism by conservatives, said that "something deeper and more reconstructive is required than any actions so far taken" to bring business practices into conformance with the American faith.

He added, however, that he did not refer to government of cities, States or the Nation, but to "government of productive enterprises, of social bodies of all sorts."

Senate Foes Rally Against Works Bill

T. Robinson, indicating there will be no move to railroad the bill through, has conceded there may be substantial amendments.

Senator Byrnes explained last night that Monday's meeting of the Appropriations Committee has been called to determine what will be done with the bill, and whether hearings will be held. There were no hearings before the House Appropriations Committee.

$10,000,000,000 Sought.

"I personally have no objection to holding hearings, and calling anyone any Senator may want to hear from. But I see no reason for calling up here persons who obviously have no information on the bill, and unnecessarily delaying passage."

Among the amendments that will be offered, if not in committee then on the Senate floor, will be a proposal by Senator La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, to increase the public works appropriations to $10,000,000,000. It will be backed by Senator Costigan (Democrat), Colorado, and other Progressives. Special allocations may be asked for road improvement and viaduct construction.

Meantime, charges were made in the House that Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau admits the Government can not finance the huge "lump sum" appropriation without aid of a measure expanding the Treasury's power to issue bonds by $11,500,000,000. The latter measure, for reissuing bonds on a "revolving" basis, was passed by the House yesterday.

Playgrounds Receive Civic Award Banners

Representatives of three playgrounds which won a safety education contest sponsored by the District of Columbia Motor Club of the American Automobile Association received "civic award banners" during ceremonies at the District Building yesterday.

The playgrounds honored were the Barry Farm, first; Georgetown, second, and Lincoln, third. Earl A. Nash, club manager, presented the banners. Congratulations were voiced by District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and by Miss Sibyl Baker, director of the playgrounds department, which cooperated with the club in the contest.

46-Million Film Tax Urged by Californian

Sacramento, Calif., Jan. 25 (AP).—A huge tax levy against motion picture films, designed to raise $46,000,000 a year, was proposed in the State Legislature today by Assemblyman Morgan (Republican), of Santa Monica. He would tax films 1 cent a foot.

"Any business which can pay salaries as high as $30,000 a week to its actors and as high as $500,000 a year to its officials," Morgan declared, "is surely better able to support State expenses than the working man or woman."

couldn't see how ratificationists could lose.

Twenty-one Republicans, 14 Democrats, and the Progressive and Farmer-Labor Senators, La Follette (Wisconsin) and Shipstead (Minnesota), voted for the reservation. Forty-six Democrats and one Republican, Keyes (New Hampshire), answered "No."

It was the first roll call since debate on the court began two weeks ago.

Norris Proposal Assailed.

Opponents of the Norris proposal, led by Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, asserted its adoption would "merely perpetuate the controversy we are now in that has lasted 11 or 12 years and permits a renewal of that controversy every time a proposal is made to refer a question, no matter how unimportant, to the court.

"It would place the power in one-third of the Senate, plus one, to prevent a peaceful settlement of controversies through the court."

Norris said he would oppose American adherence without the reservation.

"I do not want to entangle my country in European controversies," he said. "I'm unwilling to submit a controversy until submission has been considered as solemnly as we consider a treaty.

"The country might be thrown into a war by a hasty action of the President."

quoted Johnson as saying. "I'm not going to have anything to do with it. I have troubles enough of my own."

Before the House committee was the McSwain bill to provide a universal draft. Baruch asserted it "would so greatly increase our strength for war that other nations would be obliged to follow suit as a defense measure."

Bars Profit Motive.

He added:

"I look upon the action contemplated in this bill as being sufficient to place this country in a position immune against attack. While it removes the war profit motive, it has other great advantages. By keeping prices down to peace-time levels, it vastly increases the Nation's financial strength for war.

"It also insures against conditions following in the wake of war such as this depression in which some 16 years after the Armistice we are still engulfed."

Baruch also urged a "visa and license system for export of munitions under somebody like the State Department who understands our relations with the rest of the world." War-time income taxes, he said, should be "just as high as we could get them and still make them function."

Fred testified to the Senate committee that much delay in construction of the 21 vessels, for which PWA funds had been provided, was encountered because of failure of private companies to supply plans for the vessels. Meanwhile, he added, "our men walked the streets."

Bardo Protests.

The failure of the New York Shipbuilding Co. to supply plans for cruisers to the Philadelphia Navy Yard, he said, resulted in 17 months' delay in laying down two keels.

Clinton L. Bardo, a former president of that company, who was not on the stand yesterday, protested to the committee after it had adjourned.

"There is not a word of truth in what he is saying about those plans," he said. "If you had called me I could have given you the facts."

"You will have your chance when you are called again," said Chairman Nye.

"But the story is out that the New York Shipbuilding Co. is holding up plans for those ships and that is not so," Bardo retorted.

Ousted 3 Sue Code Authority To Regain Jobs

Ex-Members of Cotton Garment Board Also Name NRA.

Justice Jesse C. Adkins, of the District Supreme Court, last night had under advisement a petition by three former members of the cotton garment code authority, in which they seek to compel their reinstatement.

The three, E. M. Joblin, Lee H. Jones and W. E. Stevens, complained that they were ousted after manufacturing companies in which they were financially interested went into court in an attempt to nullify an amendment to the cotton texile code, which decreased working hours per week 10 per cent, but maintained the same weekly pay scale.

After the suit was filed, it was charged, 11 members of the garment code were excused from further participation in the board's activities. Later, 8 of the 11 were reinstated, and the three who were not filed suit.

The national industrial recovery authorities, named as one of the defendants, asked dismissal of the suit. As grounds for that contention, NRA said that, having the right to select the members of the board, it had the right to cancel their appointments. Another angle of the Government's position is that as the men represented various industries the industries should have filed suit, not the individual.

The cotton garment code authority, also named defendant, asked Justice Adkins to dismiss the suit as to it, because it claimed it was a New York corporation and had its principal office in that State. It could not, therefore, be served with suit here, attorneys charged.

47 Lives Lost In Ship Crash Off N. J. Coast

Talisman Skipper Blames Mohawk in Disaster; U. S. Inquiry Today.

its compass, checking it with the radio beams.

Then the Mohawk proceeded slowly forward.

This, in the opinion of mariners and from information gleaned from survivors, is what happened:

As the Mohawk hove to, the freighter Talisman passed her and kept closer inshore. Then, as the Mohawk proceeded again, her apparatus went "haywire" throwing her into the Talisman's course.

Sent Out S O S Quickly.

Frank Novak, an able seaman on the bridge of the Mohawk as a lookout, reported those on the bridge sighted the Talisman a mile and a half away.

But, unlike the disaster of several months ago aboard another Ward liner, the Morro Castle—which burned with a loss of 124 lives but a few miles from the spot where the Mohawk went down—there was no delay in sending out the S O S.

From piecemeal stories of survivors, it was learned the port side of the Mohawk was badly ripped open by the collision. This brought the possibility many of those missing were crushed to death in their quarters or were unable to make their way to any of the vessel's ten lifeboats.

Among the missing or dead were several, vacation-bound socially prominent persons.

Included were Mr. and Mrs. Julian L. Peabody, of Westbury, N. Y., and Aiken, S. C. Mrs. Peabody is the sister of "Tommy" Hitchcock, the international poloist.

Another of the dead was Prof. Herman Fitzgerald Cleland, geologist of Williams College. With six senior students of Williams College, he was bound for Yucatan to study Mayan ruins. One of the students was still missing.

Steering Apparatus Failed.

It was Robert Tex Barnett, an able seaman on the Mohawk, who provided the information the ship's steering apparatus was out of order.

"I was on the bridge," he said, "and knew the telemotor went haywire.

"The quartermaster called the third mate, who hurried into the chart room to check the course.

"The ship swung hard to port and I went to get the mate. Someone else called the engineers to fix the telemotor and also called the skipper, who immediately sounded the alarm."

Capt. Wood, Barnett said, dispatched men below to connect the hand steering apparatus after the electric equipment failed.

The quick dispatch of the S O S signals from both the Mohawk and the Talisman brought the Algonquin—a Clyde-Mallory liner and sister ship of the Mohawk—and the United Fruit liner Limon to the rescue quickly.

Liners Picked Up Many.

The Algonquin, inbound to New York, picked up 94 persons, of whom 37 were passengers and 57 of the crew. The Limon, bound for South American ports for a cargo of bananas, rescued 21 members of the crew and one passenger. All of these were taken from lifeboats lowered from the Mohawk.

The Limon later transferred its cargo of rescued to the Coast Guard cutter Champlain. The cutter was on patrol duty off the Jersey Coast and answered the S O S calls.

The cutter brought its rescued at once to New York.

Of those brought in by the Algonquin and the cutter, 40 men and women were suffering severe cases of exposure and were taken to hospitals.

Passenger Dies of Injuries.

Earl R. Barr, of Westmount, N. J., was one of those picked up by the Algonquin. He died aboard the liner from injuries and a heart attack.

Also aboard the Algonquin were two English children whose father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. John Telfer, of London, are still missing. The children are in a hospital.

Of the missing and dead, 32 are members of the crew and 15 are passengers.

One of those rescued by the Algonquin was Thomas Charles, 22-year-old quartermaster aboard the Mohawk.

His head swathed in bandages, his ears and neck badly frostbitten, Charles said he jumped overboard after helping passengers into lifeboats.

Charles said he was aboard the Morro Castle when that luxurious cruise ship was swept from stem to stern by fire, and that he also was aboard the Ward liner Havana, which went on a reef off the Florida coast several weeks ago.

As he walked down the gangplank of the Algonquin, he was heard to say:

"No more Ward Line for me."

Mohawk Sounded Warning.

In contrast to the confusion accompanying the Morro Castle disaster, there was comparative calm on the Mohawk.

Just before the collision, there were three sharp blasts from the Mohawk's whistles—the warning to watch out. Then, the crash. The plates of the freighter held fast. About all the damage was a twisted prow.

But the prow of the freighter ripped disastrously into the forward port side of the liner. The sea rushed in with a sickening roar. Survivors told of seeing two sailors on the fo'cas'le deck of the Mohawk crushed to death in the crash.

At once, the Mohawk started to heel over.

"There was no panic," said Eddie De Waard, leader of the orchestra on the pleasure-bound Mohawk. "The crew ordered every one to the boats. * * * Some of the boats on the port side could not be lowered, the boat was listing so badly.

"Suddenly the ship straightened again and these boats, too, were lowered away."

Liner Sank in Half Hour.

In a few minutes, the Mohawk started down by her nose.

Thirty minutes after the crash, beneath the icy waters of the Atlantic went the Mohawk to the bottom.

There were still many persons aboard, said some survivors.

All the while, Capt. Wood had been trying to drive the Mohawk into the shallow water of the Jersey shore.

"We had passed the Mohawk about half an hour before," said Capt. J. W. Mackenzie of the Algonquin. "The first S O S was received at 9:20 Eastern standard time. My radio officer told me the Mohawk had been beached. But as we came to the scene, I could see she was not."

The Algonquin did not lower its lifeboats although they were held in readiness. Capt. Mackenzie said there were sufficient lifeboats lowered from the Mohawk.

This added to the belief those who perished were unable to reach the boats, either cut off by the sea rushing into the port side, or killed in the collision.

Government Rushes Probe.

As the rescue craft still plied the waters off the Jersey coast tonight—in the same general locality that is the grave of the Navy airship Akron—the Federal Government was rushing its inquiry plans.

Capt. Carl Nielson, inspector of hulls, was in charge of the inquiry temporarily. The local head of the steamboat service, a hero of several sea rescues, Capt. George Fried, was in Washington on business when the collision occurred.

Capt. Nielson said the Mohawk was thoroughly inspected at Jacksonville, Fla., last September and passed all tests.

On January 15, last, the Mohawk passed a hull inspection while in dry dock in Brooklyn.

U. S. Charges Face Film Union's Head

Chicago Unit's Dictator Accused on Taxes.

Chicago, Jan. 25 (AP).—Thomas E. Maloy's dictatorship over the Chicago Motion Picture Operators Union—marked by murders, strikes, bombings and terrorism—was threatened today by a Federal indictment charging him with income tax evasion.

The Government accused him of dodging $81,059 in levies against the $350,939 he allegedly earned but neglected to report from 1929 to 1933.

Judge James H. Wilkerson set Maloy's bond at $20,000 and ordered his arrest. It was reported that the labor "czar" would surrender in the next few days to begin a fight against maximum penalties of 20 years in prison and fines totaling $40,000.

Veteran Starts Golfing 3,000 Miles on Wager

Laredo, Tex., Jan. 25 (AP).—Paul Max Neuhaus, former Merchant Marine captain and World War veteran, teed off for New York today.

As a result of a $500 wager with Karl Koering, while playing golf last year at Albany, N. Y., Neuhaus started stroking a golf ball from the Mexican border to Rouse's Point, N. Y. He must traverse the 3,000 miles in 160 days. Neuhaus expects to average from 15 to 25 miles daily.

George Barker Seeks $10,000 Left by 'Ma'

Joplin, Mo., Jan. 25 (AP).—Friends of George Barker, worn little tourist camp caretaker, are seeking to obtain for him the $10,000 found in the Oklawaha, Fla., home where his divorced wife and son, Fred, died in a fight with Federal agents January 16.

Ill and deserted long ago by his wife, Kate "Ma" Barker, and their four sons, he nears the age of 70 with few resources from law-abiding life as a miner, laborer and caretaker. Men and women with whom he works chipped in funds today for legal action to establish his claim.

Suspect Seized In Dual Slaying Faces Grilling

Wanted Also for Series of Baltimore Robberies; New Clew Found.

Two fresh clews, either of which may mean a "break" in the stubborn case, guided Montgomery County and Metropolitan police yesterday in their search for the murderers of James Mitchell and Emory Smith, Capital Transit Co. employes, at the Chevy Chase Lake car barn early Monday morning.

Entering a downtown rooming house here, detectives arrested for Baltimore police a man wanted there for participation in 17 holdups and similar crimes.

Two Others Are Held.

He was held without bond, and after being questioned by Inspector F. S. W. Burke, chief of detectives, was taken to the scene of the dual slaying, en route to Baltimore. He will face a barrage of questions about his whereabouts the morning of the murder when he appears in the Baltimore line-up.

Two of his alleged confederates already are under arrest in Baltimore, where they are being held under $25,000 bond each.

"It looks like there may be a connection between this prisoner and the shooting," Inspector Burke said.

The second clew upon which officers worked was furnished by a colored truck driver, in interstate service, who returned early yesterday from a trip to Pennsylvania.

Recognized One Suspect.

He told police he was driving his truck past the Chevy Chase Lake barns at 4:30 a. m. Monday. Glancing from his seat, he saw a dark sedan pull up in front of the structure, and two colored men get out.

Through the fog he saw them stand for a moment under an arc light on the porch. He recognized one of them as a man with whom he formerly worked.

Police, who have the name of the man alleged to have been observed at the scene of the murder, are searching for him. They are keeping a guard over the truck driver.

State's Attorney James H. Pugh, in Rockville, said last night he expects a "break" in the case soon.

Cabell Heads Armour Co.

Chicago, Jan. 25 (AP).—R. H. Cabell, general manager of Armour & Co., was elected president of the packing company today at the annual meeting of the board of directors. The position had been vacant since the death of Thomas G. Lee last year. Frederick H. Prince, Boston capitalist, was re-elected chairman of the board.

Roosevelt Set To Urge Action For Sea Safety

Congress Will Get Bills Designed to Check Ship Disasters.

President Roosevelt is expected to send to Congress within the next few days proposals for legislation designed to help put an end to sea disasters. Several bills proposed by the Steamboat Inspection Bureau of the Commerce Department were transmitted to the President almost simultaneously with receipt of details of the Mohawk disaster.

The proposed legislation would give the Government complete supervision over details of construction of vessels, increase the inspection staff, extend control to motor ships as well as steamships, and provide for "surprise" inspection voyages by Government inspectors

Reports Made on Ships.

The recommendations are based on investigations which followed the Morro Castle fire. Following that disaster, a number of Naval officers were assigned to make incognito voyages on various ships and to report what they found. Their reports are in the hands of the inspection bureau.

Capt. George Fried, supervising steamboat inspector for the New York district, said that investigation of the Mohawk tragedy would start immediately. Preliminary hearings will be held before a board in New York.

Wagner Calls for Inquiry.

Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, expressed the belief that the Mohawk disaster would bring about a Senate investigation of ship tragedies. Wagner introduced a resolution early in the session asking for an inquiry into the Morro Castle fire.

Joseph B. Weaver, head of the Steamboat Inspection Service, left for New York to assist in the investigation there.

couldn't be lowered at all, the Mohawk listed so badly.

"Then the ship straightened again, ten minutes after the crash, maybe. They got lifeboats into the water. Then it tilted the other way. It started to sink at the head. It plunged straight down, 30 minutes after it was hit. There were still many people on it.

"We got our boat over all right, but I saw one that hung end down from the davits. There were people swimming in the water. The seas were rolling high. We picked up one boy but we couldn't reach any others.

"I couldn't find my drummer, Anton Woelfel . . . I think he died."

Lifeboat Ropes Frozen.

There was trouble getting the lifeboats lowered—the ship was listing sharply, the ropes were frozen and had to be chopped and cut away. Then the drop into the water, only a few feet, perhaps, but enough to upset the boat if it fell the wrong way.

"In the boat there was yelling for a knife," said Alphonse Negroe, 27, a passenger, "and the sailors cut the ropes. It couldn't be rowed. Half the people thought it was sinking * * *

"The waves were high. Many people in the boat were frostbitten. * * * Men were swimming and screaming. We picked one up."

It was bitter cold in the boats. The spray froze men's hands to the oars. But the lights of nearby rescue vessels spurred them on.

Senate Passes Bill For RFC Extension

care of 400,000, the corporation on November 13 stopped accepting requests for loans.

A special survey by the HOLC was said yesterday to have shown that $1,250,000,000 would be the working minimum which it would be necessary to recommend to Congress.

Loans to industry has been one of the sore spots in the RFC act for Senators and House members alike. They have complained because less than $7,000,000 of $300,000,000 given the corporation for industrial loans actually had been disbursed.

Jones Hears Debate.

The Senate amendment covering the point, by Senator Lonergan (Democrat), of Connecticut, would authorize such advances "so secured as to reasonably assure repayment."

Chairman Jones, of the RFC, told both Senate and House Banking Committees this language would permit many more loans to industry than the present requirement of "adequate security."

Jones listened to Senate debate from the press gallery yesterday, frequently sending down notes to Senators on the floor.

The bill would move the expiration date of the RFC up to February 1, 1937.

Glass Assents.

While contending the estimate of credit needs was greatly exaggerated, Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, banking and monetary expert, said he had no objection to the amendment because it meant the same thing as adequate security.

Senator Couzens (Republican), of Michigan, put through an amendment that would limit loans to railroads to $350,000,000. As he offered it he said the RFC directors had done a good job but:

"I personally resent Congress drafting legislation for one individual. We can't determine who will administer the law in the future. Congress should draft bills so it won't have to rely on Jones or anybody else."

British Painter Finds Roosevelt Difficult Model

President Roosevelt has a "magnificent head," but it is also one of very mobile expression. Which makes the President extremely difficult to paint—much harder than Mussolini, for example.

This from Frank O. Salisbury, the eminent British artist, who each day this week has stationed his easel close to the Presidential desk as Mr. Roosevelt conferred with one group of callers after another.

Mussolini also gave Salisbury a week to paint his portrait, under similar circumstances. But the Italian premier has only one predominant expression, while the American President has hundreds of them, the artist said.

"Sometimes," the Britisher confided, "I wait for an hour before I get the exact expression I want."

Education Unit Awards Office To C. S. Marsh

He Will Take Post When Successor Is Named for CCC Job.

Clarence Stephen Marsh will become associate director of the American Council on Education as soon as his successor as educational director of the Civilian Conservation Corps is chosen, it was announced yesterday.

For the past year Dr. Marsh has been on leave from the University of Buffalo, where he was dean of the School of Business Administration, conducting educational activities of the CCC. Several months ago he was involved, along with Commissioner of Education John W. Studebaker, in a controversy with Robert Fechner over proposed camp distribution of a booklet entitled, "You and Machines." Fechner is director of Emergency Conservation Work.

Dr. Marsh and Dr. George F. Zook, director of the American Council on Education, both stoutly denied yesterday that the incident had anything to do with the former's accepting his new position.

Written by Prof. William F. Ogburn, University of Chicago economist, for distribution in CCC camps, "You and Machines" was sidetracked by Fechner's order after thousands of copies had been printed. Hundreds of them, however, have been sold to colleges, high schools and individuals.

The booklet, which deals with both the constructive and destructive influences of machines, was to have been the first of a series by different authors on various popular subjects. The entire program is being held in abeyance.

Dr. Marsh succeeds to the post held by Dr. John H. MacCracken, formerly president of Lafayette College, who resigned last September.

Dennis Will Speak At the Town Hall

Author to Discuss Fascism in This Country.

Lawrence Dennis, author of "Is Capitalism Doomed?" a graduate of Harvard University, a veteran officer of the World War and formerly a member of the Diplomatic Corps, will be the principal speaker at the meeting of the Town Hall in the Shoreham Hotel tomorrow evening.

Mr. Dennis will take for his topic "Is Fascism in the United States Inevitable?"

The panel for discussion will include Col. George Brady, assistant administrative officer in the NRA; Dr. Calvin B. Hoover, professor of economics at Duke University and economic adviser to the Secretary of Agriculture; Richard Hogue, director of the Independent Research Bureau and founder of the Baltimore Open Forum; John Franklin Carter, well-known magazine writer, and Dorothy Detzer, prominently identified with peace movements in the United States.

All D. C. Coal Dealers Are Ordered Licensed

Licensing of all District coal dealers was ordered yesterday by the District commissioners under the authority given by Congress in 1932 to license all forms of business.

By placing the dealers under license, the commissioners will have a weapon with which to deal with coal distributors who are found to be short-weighing customers.

The licensing was recommended by George M. Roberts, superintendent of weights and measures. In cases of short-weighing, the commissioners are empowered to revoke the licenses or to deny a renewal. The license fee will be $10.

Foote to Take Office As Press Club Head

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, will be the principal speaker at inauguration ceremonies for Mark Foote, twenty-eighth president of the National Press Club, in the club tonight.

The following will be inducted into office at the same time; George W. Stimpson, vice president; Paul Hodges, secretary; Charles A. Hamilton, treasurer; Cecil B. Dickson, financial secretary, and a board of governors including Arthur W. Hatchen, Harold Brayman, Lorenzo W. Martin and George L. Tarry.

Gas Charge Rule Asked.

A uniform rule controlling the gas charges for rooming and boarding houses was suggested to the Public Utilities Commission by People's Counsel William A. Roberts. Under the present rule, the gas companies have no fixed standard on these charges, levying both the commercial and residential rates. Roberts suggested a rooming or boarding house be limited to ten beds to entitle it to the residential rate.

Road Engineers Fight Building By Government

William P. McDonald, of New York, Elected New President.

Adopting resolutions touching upon virtually every phase of the highway construction industry's relations with the Government, and electing a new slate of officers and directors, the American Road Builders' Association closed a four-day convention here yesterday.

Edward Costigan, Washington contractor, was one of seven men named to serve on the organization's board of directors for three years. Charles M. Upham, Washington engineer-director, was reelected to a three-year term.

To a suggestion from some Governmental quarters that road building under the new works appropriation be carried forward by a system of "force account" or day labor, the association replied with three resolutions, two urging construction by award to private contractors and the third calling the attention of the President and Congress to "the CWA experience as a conclusive reason" against further highway building by Government agencies.

Abandonment of the 30-hour week in Federal road construction and substitution of a 40-hour week, 8-hour day maximum, with labor to be drawn from States rather than by counties in which work is being done, was asked in another pair of resolutions.

A convention resolution recommended also that "a substantial part of this public works appropriation be definitely and specifically allocated" to highways and elimination of grade crossings.

Other resolutions advocated a Nation-wide study of traffic needs and urged discontinuance of highway funds diversion of relief, handling of highway money by the Bureau of Public Roads and the State highway departments and early announcement of Federal road building intentions as a spur to recovery in the heavy industries.

William P. McDonald, of New York, was elected association president to succeed Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District highway director. Other new officers were Paul B. Reinhold, of Pittsburgh; George Pou, of Raleigh; Grover C. Dillman, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and Stanley Abel, of Taft, Calif., vice presidents, and James H. MacDonald, of New Haven, treasurer.

Hauptmann Is Seeking to Escape Across Grave of Isador Fisch

Chorus of 'Nos' Bruno's Reply To Accusations

Lays Blame for Kidnaping and Murder to Man Dead in Germany.

Q. What business was he in?—A. Fur trading.

Hauptmann, speaking slowly, said he went into the fur business with him "half and half."

"I gave him $600," he said.

Q. Did you ever receive any money from the fur business?—A. Oh, yes; small sums and large sums.

Q. What was the largest sum you received in one year from the fur business?—A. I guess over $1,000.

Q. Was this business carried on under a trade name or partnership? A. It was entirely under the name of Isador Fisch.

Q. Did he have any invoices made out?—A. I think he did.

Q. By a young woman in the neighborhood?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever meet a Miss Halpert in connection with Fisch's fur business?—A. Yes, at Mr. and Mrs. Henckel's house.

Q. How did you come to meet Henckel?—A. At Hunters Island. Fisch lived with the Henckels.

Fisch Went to Europe.

Q. Do you remember when Fisch went to Europe?—A. December, 1933.

Q. Who was at your house that night?—A. Mrs. Frederickson.

Q. And he never returned?—A. No.

Q. When was the last time he called at your house?—A. The night before he sailed.

Q. Did Fisch have anything with him that night, a bundle, a package?—A. No, sir.

Q. Before he sailed did he leave anything with you?—A. Two suit cases, 400 skins, two boxes.

Q. The skins, what were they?—A. Hudson seal.

Q. Did you have those skins in your possession when you were arrested?—A. I did.

Hauptmann said the New York police, for all he knew, had possession of the skins.

Q. What kind of a little box was it, pasteboard or wood?—A. I found out it was a shoe box later.

Hauptmann leaned forward as he told how he got the box from Fisch.

"He had a little package. He asked me to keep it in a dry place.

"I put it in the broom closet on an upper shelf."

Q. Whereabouts in the closet?—A. On the upper shelf.

Q. How long did that shoe box remain in the broom closet?—A. To the middle of August, '34.

Q. What caused you to disturb it?—A. I hit the box with a broom handle. I damaged it and saw it had money in it.

Q. Was there any moisture there?—A. It was all soaking wet. I took the box down.

Q. Did you take the box down?—A. I put it in the garage.

Found Money in Box.

Q. How much money was there?—A. I didn't count it.

Q. Is that the money you afterward started to spend?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it the money found in your garage?—A. Yes.

Q. Was Fisch dead at that time?—A. He was.

Q. What did you do with the two satchels he left?—A. I opened the big satchel and searched it. I found nothing. I took it out and left it in the garage.

Q. While Fisch was in Germany did he write to you?—A. Yes.

The question indicated the defense had specimens of Fisch's handwriting to compare with the ransom notes.

Reilly switched his questions to the map of the crime area near Hopewell.

A delay ensued while a map of the Bronx section near Hauptmann's home was removed from the wall back of the witness stand.

Q. I'm pointing now to the estate of Col. Lindbergh. Hauptmann, were you ever in Hopewell in your life?—A. I was not.

Hauptmann did not seem as boyish as yesterday. He was deadly serious. The jurors regarded him thoughtfully. The audience was interested.

He looked carefully at the map.

Q. On the night of March 1, 1932, were you on the grounds of Col. Lindbergh's estate at Hopewell, N. J.?—A. I was not.

He snapped that "not" like a whip. It cracked over the courtroom.

"Never Saw Lindbergh Baby."

Q. On the night of March 1, 1932, did you leave on the window seat of the nursery a note?—A. I wasn't there at all.

Q. On the night of March 1, 1932, did you enter the Lindbergh nursery and——?—A. I did not.

Q. And steal young Charles A. Lindbergh, jr.?—A. I was never there.

There was injured innocence and a trace of bewilderment in his tone.

Q. You never saw Baby Lindbergh in your life?—A. I never saw him.

Reilly stopped his questions, spoken in loud, emphatic tones, to get a State exhibit.

Reilly handed him the ransom note left in the nursery. He held it gingerly as he studied it.

Q. Did you see that note before?—A. I saw it in the Bronx courtroom.

Q. Did you write it?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you leave it in the Lindbergh nursery?—A. I did not.

Hauptmann smiled as he looked at the note and gave his replies. Lindbergh studied the former convict's face.

Tells of Looking for Work.

Q. Will you again tell the jury where you were March 1, 1932? You referred to it in a general way yesterday.—A. I took my wife to the bakery, between half-past six and quarter to seven, in the car.

Q. How many miles was it from your home to the bakery?—A. A good mile.

Q. After Anna entered the bakery at 7 o'clock, what did you do?—A. I went right home, put the car in the garage. I left my house later and went to the subway. I took the subway to Seventy-second street to the Majestic Apartments. My tools were in the carpenter shop. I told the superintendent I can't starve. So I left the tools at the Majestic and I went back to the employment agency where I got the job. I tried to get the $10 back. I couldn't get it back. They said, "Come around tomorrow. There may be something doing then."

He told how he visited another agency and Radio City seeking a job, but had no success.

"I went home about 5 p. m.," Hauptmann continued. "There was nobody there. I went to the bakery for Anna, I would say around 7 o'clock. My wife was alone there."

Q. Did you do anything with the Fredericksen's police dog?—A. I usually took him out for a walk.

Q. While waiting for Anna?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you take him out that night?

Attorney General David T. Wilentz objected to the question as "leading" and Reilly rephrased it.

Q. Tell us what you did that night.—A. I usually had my supper, then I took the dog out for a walk——

"Took Dog for a Walk."

Q. Never mind what you usually did. Did you take the dog out that night?—A. I did.

Q. Did you meet anybody?—A. A man at a gasoline station was asking about the dog.

Q. You remember meeting a man on the night of March 1 who talked about the dog?—A. Yes.

Q. At about what time of night?—A. Between 8 and 8:30.

Q. Did you bring the dog back to the restaurant?—A. A quarter to 9, a quarter after 9 o'clock. I don't remember.

Q. In the neighborhood of 9 o'clock, anyhow.—A. Yes.

Q. Did you drive your wife home—A. Yes.

Wilmentz again objected to the questions as leading and Reilly asserted "We allowed the attorney general to testify all through the State's case. I'm merely trying to direct his attention to March 1."

Q. What did you do?—A. We went home and I put the car in the garage.

Q. So on March 1, 1932, I ask you again, were you in Hopewell, N. J.?—A. No.

Reilly had him describe his movements on March 2, how he went downtown and bought a newspaper.

Read About Kidnaping.

"Then for the first time I read about the Lindbergh kidnaping."

Lindbergh's eyes still were focused searchingly on the prisoner.

Really produced one of the ransome notes, addressed to Col. Lindbergh, March 4, 1932.

Q. Did you address this letter to Col. Lindbergh?—A. No sir.

Q. Did you write that?—A. I did not write anything like that.

Q. When was the first time you read that letter?—A. I saw some letters in the courtroom in the Bronx. I don't know which ones.

Q. You didn't mark them?—A. No.

Q. When did you first learn that Col. Lindbergh lived at Hopewell?—A. I read it in the paper.

Q. The morning after the kidnaping?

Wilentz objected again.

Q. When did you read of the kidnaping?—A. March 2.

Q. You didn't know Col. Lindbergh?—A. No.

Q. You didn't know he lived in Hopewell?—A. No.

Q. You were never in Hopewell?—A. No.

Q. When did you first read he lived in Hopewell?—A. On March 2, 1932, when I read it in the paper.

Q. Do I understand you, every day you went the usual route looking for work?—A. March second I took my tools——

Identifies Tools.

Reilly interrupted.

Q. Are these your tools?—A. Yes.

Hauptmann squatted down and examined the toolbox, checking over its contents.

Resuming his story he recounted how he worked at the National Lumber & Millwork Co. lumber yard doing "contract work" between the first and fifteenth of March, 1932.

It was this yard to which the State traced the kidnap ladder lumber.

On March 15, the defendant said, he started work at the Majestic Apartments, after calling at the employment agency where he was registered.

Q. Now if the time book shows—

A delay followed while Wilentz and Reilly searched for Hauptmann's time record in the book.

Q. The best of your recollection is that you went to work on the 15th or 16th?—A. Either one of the two days.

Q. And you worked right through, as you testified yesterday?—A. Until the 2d of April.

Reilly brought forward more ransom notes. Hauptmann stared at them as the defense attorney walked toward him.

Q. I ask you if you mailed this envelope and these two letters to Col. Henry L. Breckinridge?

Hauptmann looked curiously at the ransom notes mentioned.

A. I did not.

Q. Is that your handwriting?—

Again he made the calm inspection.

A. It is not.

Denies Knowing Jafsie.

Q. Did you know a Dr. Condon?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you know a "Jafsie?"—A. No.

Q. I show you exhibit S-22 and ask if that's your handwriting?—A. It is not.

Q. Did you ever know a Col. Henry L. Breckinridge in March, 1932?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you mail this letter to Dr. John Condon March 9?—A. No.

Q. Did you have anyone mail that letter for you?—A. I did not.

Q. Is that your handwriting?—A. It is not.

Q. I ask you if you wrote that letter?—A. I did not.

Q. When for the first time did you see Dr. Condon, who testified here?—A. In a New York police station—the downtown district.

Q. That was after your arrest?—A. Yes.

Hauptmann looked a little bored at times—tired.

Reilly brought forward another ransom note.

Hauptmann said the letter and the envelope were not written in his handwriting.

One by one, Reilly brought the notes of the correspondence between the kidnaper and "Jafsie" to Hauptmann, who denied he wrote any of them.

Reilly proceeded with great deliberation, fumbling the notes and the transparent paper covers, oblivious of the watching crowd.

Gazes at Baby's Clothes.

Finally Reilly produced the wrapping paper in which the kidnaper mailed the baby's sleeping suit to Dr. Condon.

Q. I ask you if any part of this paper—if the first or the second addresses on it were written by you?—A. It's not written by me.

Reilly produced the sleeping suit. Hauptmann gazed at it as if fascinated.

Q. Did you ever take that off Baby Lindbergh?—A. I never saw that baby, alive or dead.

Q. Did you ever have that suit in your possession?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you ever mail it to Dr. Condon?—A. I did not.

Hauptmann's face was deadly serious and pale. His head turned to the side and he shifted uneasily in his chair as he answered.

Q. You saw the thumb guard here in court?—A. Well, I saw it only at a distance.

Q. I ask you, did you ever see that thumb guard?—A. I never saw that. I don't know what it is for.

Hauptmann's eyes were fixed on the little wire contrivance as Reilly held it up between thumb and finger.

Another ransom note was thrust before Hauptmann, and another, and another.

"Did you write that letter?" Reilly asked, gently, each time.

"No, I did not," was the carefully enunciated reply to each question.

After a brief recess Hauptmann returned to his chair at the rail with his guards. He sat down wearily, serious-faced. His wife looked at him proudly, smiled, and spoke a few encouraging words.

Court resumed at 11:23. While Reilly discussed an exhibit with his associates, Hauptmann looked around the room.

Justice Trenchard suggested Reilly proceed and Hauptmann swung his head to stare at the presiding judge.

Reilly showed the witness a picture of the scene of the ransom contacts "John" had with Dr. Condon.

It showed the entrance to Woodlawn Cemetery, when John and Jafsie met for the first time. It was admitted as evidence.

Q. How far away would you say the main entrance of Woodlawn Cemetery is from your house?—A. I don't know where the main entrance of Woodlawn Cemetery are.

The map of the Bronx area was again tacked to the exhibit board.

Reilly designated Woodlawn Cemetery with the long pointer. Wilentz aided in pointing out the gate at 233d street.

Q. Were you at that gate, or inside that gate, the night of March 12?—A. I was not.

Reilly pointed out on the map the Hauptmann house and the cemetery gates to the defendant.

Q. How far would you say now it was?—A. I really can't say.

He was apologetic.

Hauptmann gazed all over the map before answering, as though looking for a scale.

Q. How far to Webster avenue? A. To Webster avenue, I figure, would be 40-50 blocks.

Q. Were you there in that cemetery on the night of March 12, 1932? A. I can't remember I ever was there.

Q. But on that night were you there and did you meet Dr. Condon there?—A. No.

"Wasn't at Cemetery."

Q. Have you any independent recollection where you were the night of March 12?—A. What day of the week was it?

Q. Saturday.—A. I really don't know. It's hard to remember.

Q. But were you at Woodlawn Cemetery?—A. I was not.

Q. Did you climb over any gate and run away from Dr. Condon?—A. Certainly not.

Reilly showed him a picture of the frankfurter stand near the cemetery, where Jafsie found a kidnap note.

Q. Were you ever in that frankfurter stand?—A. No, I was not.

Q. Did you ever sit on a bench there and talk to Dr. Condon?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever see this shack (indicating the place where Dr. Condon and the kidnaper talked, seated on a bench.)?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever sit there coughing, with Dr. Condon?—A. No.

His answers were given naturally and frankly.

Reilly turned from the witness.

"Bring out the ladder," he directed. Hauptmann looked speculatively at it.

Reilly, reaching for the kidnap ladder, asked, "Now, how many years, Bruno, have you been a carpenter?"

"About ten years," Hauptmann replied.

Q. Did you build that ladder?—A. I am a carpenter.

He grinned and the courtroom tittered.

Says He Didn't Build Ladder.

Q. Did you build that ladder?—A. No.

Q. Have you noticed its construction?—A. I have been noticing it.

Reilly called Hauptmann from the stand to examine the ladder.

Q. In your opinion, does it look like a well-made ladder?—A. It doesn't look like a ladder at all. I don't know how a man can step up.

Q. Did you ever take that ladder from the Bronx to Hopewell in your car?—A. I never transported a ladder.

Q. Did you take this ladder?—A. No.

Hauptmann almost growled that negative.

Q. Did you at any time have that ladder on Col. Lindberg's estate?—A. No.

Q. Did you put it against his wall or climb it or come down it?—A. No.

Q. Did you leave it 70 feet away in the bushes?—A. No.

Hauptmann was then led into a recital of his life at the Bronx house. He named the persons living in the small three-apartment frame building.

Q. So there was a landlord and two tenants living in your house?—A. That's right.

Q. Now there has been exhibited here a board out of the attic of your house. Did you take any board from the attic of your house?—A. No.

Q. Did you take any board and carve or cut it?—A. I did not.

Q. There was nothing in your attic when you moved in?—A. No; it was empty.

Reilly brought to the witness the chisel found on the Lindbergh estate.

Denies Owning Chisel.

Q. I ask you if you brought this chisel to the Lindbergh estate?—A. This chisel was never in my possession; I never owned it.

He examined the tool very minutely, turning it over in his hands before he answered.

Q. Now carpenters can buy chisels from a supply house?—A. Every hardware store.

Q. Anybody can buy a chisel? He doesn't have to be a carpenter?—A. No.

Q. Anybody can buy tools?—A. If you can pay for it, that's all right. Yes.

A faint murmur of suppressed laughter arose. Lindbergh did not smile. He kept watching the witness.

Reilly next turned his attention to St. Raymond's Cemetery. Another delay occurred while the kidnap ladder and attic board were removed from in front of the map.

Q. How many miles, in your judgment, is St. Raymond's Cemetery from your home?—A. I can only figure on the scale. What is the scale?

Q. Quite a number of blocks, isn't it?—A. Yes.

Reilly pointed to the cemetery on the map.

Q. Were you ever there?—A. Yes. About six years ago, but not in the cemetery. I walked by.

Q. Where were you going?—A. To visit friends at Throggs Neck.

Q. Are you familiar with this portion of the Bronx (indicating St. Raymond's Cemetery)?

Hauptmann stepped down and with his arms outstretched indicated the center section of the map. His gesture did not include either cemetery connected with the crime.

Denies Receiving Ransom.

Q. Now on April 2, Saturday night, were you in St. Raymond's Cemetery and did you receive $50,000 from Dr. Condon?—A. I did not.

A faint smile accompanied the answer.

Q. Is that the night you testified to concerning the musicale, first Saturday of the month?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you go out?—A. Yes; half past 11. I took Kloeppenburg to the station at White Plains avenue, nine blocks from the house.

Q. Now, you told us you were in business with Fisch, and——

Reilly stopped in the middle of the question and went over to his table to thumb through some papers.

Q. Can you give me your best recollection whether you did any dealings with Fisch through the market through Carleton Mott?—A. No. Not Carleton Mott.

Hauptmann thought a long time, gazing at the ceiling, before answering.

Reilly switched to the Hauptmann bank accounts and asked him if it was correct the account of his wife, Anna Schoeffler, had a balance of $411 in 1928 when it was changed to a joint account under the name of "Richard and Anna Hauptmann."

Q. There is a withdrawal here, June 25, 1928, $456.22. Can you recall the reason for the withdrawal? A. I guess it must have been when my wife went to Germany the first time.

Q. I show you a deposit of $728.—A. This time I was working very hard, mostly evenings, Sundays and Saturdays. I opened an account at White Plains avenue. In a couple of months I closed the account, about $728.

The account, Reilly brought out, was opened in September, 1927, with $250.

Hauptmann studied the bank record with a slight frown, as Reilly went from item to item, deposits and withdrawals.

Q. Now there were withdrawals in the account of Richard and Anna in 1928; 30th of November, 29th of December and 31st of December. You made three withdrawals totaling $485. Can you explain the withdrawals?—A. I really can't explain. They were probably loans to friends.

Another withdrawal of $328, he said, was used in stock trading with Carleton & Mott.

Q. And in 1929 you were doing business with Steiner Rouse, weren't you?—A. No, it was——

Q. Or with Carleton Mott, was it?—A. Yes.

Q. Now here is a withdrawal in 1930 of $500 on June 14, and $900 June 25. Can you tell what they were for?—A. I guess I put the money in the stock market. I can't remember.

Reilly was slowly leading up to

Carpenter Describes His Stock Transactions

Saved Money To Buy Stock, Suspect Says

'I'm Carpenter,' He Avers, Scoffing at Kidnap Ladder.

his announced intention of explaining away the Hauptmann 1932-1934 prosperity which the State contends came from the ransom money.

Q. After these two withdrawals there was a deposit of $302.50 in July?—A. I guess so.

Hauptmann told of withdrawals to pay for his car, in July, 1931.

Q. Here is a withdrawal of $450, July 3?—A. I guess that was the trip to California.

Reilly finally reached 1932, and he questioned Hauptmann on the deposits and withdrawals. Some of the withdrawals the witness said were for the fur business which he conducted with Fisch.

Q. So that you were constantly making withdrawals and deposits?—A. Yes.

Started Account in 1932.

Reilly asked about a withdrawal of $837 in June, 1932, and a deposit a day or two later of $817. Hauptmann could not recall the transaction, saying "Mr. Fisher has the slip, my memorandum." Reilly obtained permission to suspend the line of questions until after the recess.

Q. When did you start your account with Steiner-Rouse?—A. August, I think, 1932.

Q. What was your first transaction?

Hauptmann pored over the brokerage house statement and finally shook his head.

"Some belonged to Fisch. Some belonged to me."

He explained he had made a memo over last week-end on his Wall street operations and he could testify better with its aid.

Reilly said he would abandon that line temporarily until the afternoon session. Wilentz said the State had no objections to the witness testifying from notes.

Q. Now getting back to Fisch's trip to Europe, you say he left a shoe box with you. When did you discover any money in that box? A. Middle of August '34.

Q. What did you do? Take it to the garage?—A. Squeezed it out first.

Q. What do you mean?—A. There was water in it. There was a leak in the roof. The water sometimes was standing in the closet this much (indicating about 1 inch with thumb and finger).

Q. You were in the top-floor apartment. This peaked roof was over you?—A. Yes.

Hauptmann then described the room arrangement of the apartment and entrance at the rear of the house.

Q. How large a room was the kitchen?—A. Twelve by six, I should say. In the rear of the house.

The alien said the broom closet was near the ice box.

Q. How wide was the closet?—A. About 2 feet. A little bit more.

He indicated with his hands.

There were plumbing pipes passing through the closet to the roof.

Tells of Leak in Roof.

Q. Explain to the jury how the water got into that closet.—A. It comes through the roof. The water. There must be a leak around the pipe.

Q. You mean at the exit through the roof?—A. Yes. The shingles may be loose. I never was up on the roof.

Q. Did the rain always come in there?—A. Sometimes none came in. Sometimes we got plenty, I guess it was the side the rain fell on.

Q. It did not leak from the pipes?—A. No.

The defendant told how curtains and other objects were wet by the water.

Q. What was the condition of the box from the time you put it up there and when you took it down?—A. It was practically falling apart.

Hauptmann told of finding the money wet.

Q. Describe the money.—A. There were four bundles wrapped up in brown paper. It was thin wrapping paper.

Q. What did you take it down to the garage with?—A. A pail.

Q. This was August, 1934?—A. Yes.

Hauptmann described the location of the garage at the side of the house with a narrow road between and a low, concrete wall along the side of the yard.

Q. So you took the money to the garage?—A. I put it in a basket and covered it up. I put it up in the ceiling so no one could see it. Not up in the ceiling but on a top shelf so the basket was at the ceiling.

Condition of Account.

Q. What was the condition of your account with Fisch when he sailed?—A. My market account was $12,000 and there was $5,500 in the Fisch account.

Q. Did you owe anything on your account?—A. No, that was money.

Q. How much of that $12,500 was Fisch's?—A. Only $2,000 was Fisch's. The rest was my money.

Reilly then directed the witness to his fur business with Fisch.

Q. Did Fisch owe you money?—A. When he went to Europe. He said, "If I'm willing to sell some of those furs." I said, "Why not?" And I said "I'll take $2,000 and give it to you."

Q. Did you give it to him?—A. Yes, about two weeks before he sailed.

Hauptmann said that in both businesses, fur and brokerage, he and Fisch split profits and losses "50-50."

Q. You knew Fisch was dead when you found that money?—A. Yes.

Q. After drying this money, what did you do with it?—A. I took it down and put two or three of them in circulation.

Q. Were you down at the Sheridan Square Theater November 26, 1933, with a ransom bill, and did you toss it in, folded in eight parts, to the ticket seller, that young woman who testified here the other day?—A. I have an idea about where the theater is. In Greenwich Village.

Q. And you live how many miles away in the Bronx?—A. About 12 to 15 miles.

Denies Going to Theater.

Q. Were you ever in that theater in your life?—A. No, I was not.

Hauptmann, answering the last question before the recess, denied he had tossed the bill to the ticket seller.

Recess for lunch came at 12:28 p. m.

Court convened at 1:42.

If anything the tiny courtroom was more crowded than ever for the afternoon session.

Hauptmann returned to the courtroom at 1:39 with his guards.

Mrs. H. Norman Schwarzkopf sat in one of the defense counsel seats and he stared at her in surprise. His face was expressionless as he looked about at the crowd shoving about in search of seats.

Again and again the gavel rapped sharply to keep order as Hauptmann went back quickly to the stand.

Reilly said he wanted to ask about November 26, 1933, when Hauptmann was alleged to have tossed a ransom bill to a theater ticket taker.

Hauptmann said the date was his birthday and a party was held at his home.

The defendant named several of his Bronx friends who attended. He did not know the last names of one or two.

Reilly presented Hauptmann a thick sheaf of memoranda which the pallid Hauptmann made last week after studying records of his financial transactions.

Q. Bruno, will you tell us what number your sheet starts from, so we can check here? Have you August 8?—A. Yes. I got it in my hand.

Q. Do you recall when you purchased that Warner Brothers?—A. There were 51 of Warner Pictures three-quarters of a year ago.

Q. Do you mean before August 8?

Hauptmann fumbled through the copies of his account for several minutes without answering.

Reilly rephrased his question and Hauptmann said it was while he was carrying another account.

Q. Now you traded in the market back and forth, is that right?—A. Right.

Q. You knew the customer's man in Steiner-Rouse. You sought his advice on what to buy and what to sell?—A. Yes; I did.

Reilly referred to a deposit of cash Hauptmann made on his account on September 15. It was $170.

Q. Where did you get that $170?—A. It was from $4,700 I had in my home at that time.

Q. When you had the Steiner-Rouse account was there one dollar of "Lindy" cash?—A. There was no "Lindy" cash at all.

Q. I notice the next month, of September, in Steiner-Rouse balance was $1,000. Correct?—A. Yes.

Q. You say Fisch gave you $850 to balance the account?—A. Yes.

Q. Now we come to October, and there was no cash put in. Correct? A. Yes.

Q. There was trading?—A. There was buying, but not selling.

Q. Then we come to December. Again there was trading but no deposits?—A. Trading but no deposits.

Q. Now will you turn to December 31, 1932, so that you had on hand in your account, Warner Brothers, Allegheny, Curtiss Wright and New York Central. That right?—A. That's right.

Reilly led Hauptmann through his transactions early in 1933, confirming from his purchase and sale of stock and cash position.

Drew $500 From Bank.

Q. What is this $700 deposit on February 27, 1933?—A. I took $500 from the bank and $200 profit.

Q. Now will you indicate the bank account you took the $500 from?—A. From the Richard and Anna Hauptmann account in the Central Savings Bank on February 27, 1933.

Q. Correct?—A. Yes.

Reilly called attention to an $850 deposit in March, 1933.

Hauptmann said: "The $850 came from Mr. Fisch."

"And he bought January 13, 100 New York Central," the witness added, speaking of Fisch.

Citing April operations, Reilly asked about a check for $1,500 dated March 24.—A. That's—I took a check out on March 24, I can't remember for what purpose. I put part of it back, that's the check for $1,500.

Pencil in hand, Hauptmann, the Wall street trader, checked brokerage and bank accounts.

Q. Referring to your account with Steiner Rouse on March 24 you took out some $1,672.90, did you not?—A. That's right.

Q. And $1,500 of that check you redeposited in Steiner Rouse. That's correct?—A. Yes.

Q. There was a great deal of trading in April?—A. Yes.

Q. The purchases were $10,000?—A. A little bit over.

Q. Your sales and deposits were approximately $9,000?—A. I couldn't follow you so quick.

Q. Isn't it a fact that your purchases in April were $11,392?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, on the 28th of April, you deposited, did you not, $2,500 in cash?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did you get that money from?—A. From Mr. Fisch.

Again the ghost of the consumptive Isador was brought in.

Reilly referred to the $2,500 deposit.

Q. Where did that money come from?—A. Fisch.

Q. Did he give it to you in cash?—A. In cash; yes.

Hauptmann told of purchases of various stocks in April.

"That's the reason he put up $2,500," he said.

The defendant, bending over the account sheets in his crossed knees, told of Fisch's stock purchases early in May.

His broken English gave a peculiar pronounciation, with rolling "R's" accentuated, to the names of familiar stocks on the New York exchanges.

Hauptmann's testimony was getting boring to an audience which had little or no interest in drab financial transactions. Coughing increased. People stirred restlessly.

Trading Heavy in May.

Q. The trading was heavy during May. Buying and selling every day?—A. Buying and selling every day.

Q. At the end of the month you had a balance of $7,937?—A. Debit.

Q. You owed the firm that much?—A. Yes.

"Let me explain what Mr. Fisch bought," Hauptmann said, beginning a recital of the operations in July.

The recital droned on, through the very active trading months of June and July in the Hauptmann brokerage account. Hauptmann designated the stock deals he said he made for Fisch and those he made for himself.

Q. How many points margin were you dealing on?—A. That depends; some 50 per cent.

Q. Did they ask for more?—A. I usually didn't let it come so far.

Reilly enumerated the deposits of July, citing specifically $4,500 July 24, 1933.

"The $4,500 was the last money Mr. Fisch put in," said Hauptmann.

"Because of this money I traded very heavily," Hauptmann continued, enumerating the long list of stocks he was carrying at this time.

Q. During July you purchased about 4,350 shares of different stocks?—A. How many hundred you say?

Q. 4,350.—A. That's about right.

Q. And you sold about 3,150 shares?—A. Yes.

"Fisch Put In $4,500."

Q. And Fisch put in about $4,500 to cover the overlapping shares?—A. Yes.

Q. You did about $49,000 worth of shares during July?—A. Yes.

Q. And you dealt in about $50,000 worth the preceding month.—A. Yes.

Lindbergh's stare at the witness was an amazing thing to watch. Rarely did his eyes shift. He sat there and looked.

Q. Now you had quite a block of stock on deposit with Steiner-Rouse at the end of July?—A. Yes.

Q. And you had bought that on margin, correct?—A. Yes.

Q. Now you began to trade quite extensively in August?—A. Yes.

Q. And I find on the tenth a check for $112.50?—A. It was a dividend check from our mortgage.

Q. So between August 15 to 28, the purchases were about $35,000? A. Yes.

Q. And you did in that month with Steiner, Rouse & Co. $75,000 worth of business?—A. Yes.

Q. And through sales and profits with no cash placed in at all except $7.50 and the dividend check of $112.50 your balance with Steiner-Rouse was $11,735; you owed them $11,735?—A. Yes.

Q. And then they were carrying quite an extensive block, on August 31?—A. Right enough. They were carrying it against me. My home.

Q. So that they were holding against your debit balance 5,900 shares of stock in 14 stocks?—A. 5,700.

More Transactions.

More obstruse financial transactions went to the record as Hauptmann recounted new market transactions. It was a dull business.

Reilly brought out that the debit balance jumped in September to $20,172.

No additional cash was put in, Reilly elicited from the defendant, although the debit increased "$10,000."

"Our margin was heavy," Hauptmann explained.

"And your balance with the firm dropped in October from $20,000 to $6,000?" Reilly asked.

"No," Hauptmann corrected him, "to $1,380."

Q. And on October 9 you began to trade?—A. Right.

Reilly cited the dates of the transactions, and Hauptmann nodded.

The market operations in October, the former convict said, totaled $46,592.93.

Q. There was no cash placed in the account that month?—A. There was $27.28.

"That wouldn't be considered cash in Wall Street," Reilly observed.

Hauptmann looked down at his papers with a slight smile.

Reilly brought out from Hauptmann that he dipped into the commodity markets at that time. He asked him what he bought.

"I am not quite sure whether it was silver, cotton or wheat," the witness apologized.

More financial transactions were spilled into the record for November, the month when the Hauptmann stock trading purchases totaled $21,000.

During the long recital of stock transactions, Justice Trenchard sat, with a glum look on his face, his face in his hand, staring out straight over the heads of the crowd.

One Man Falls Asleep.

"Now we come into December," Reilly said, but the announcement aroused little interest apparently in an audience which was thoroughly bored. One man fell asleep as the tale of figures, buying and selling droned on.

Hauptmann told of taking $7,700 from the account in December, $2,000 of which he gave to Fisch for his trip to Germany.

Q. Your debit balance that month was only $1,954?—A. That's right.

"From this time on (November 1) every stock you find on this sheet belongs to me," Hauptmann said.

Fisch, he said, was interested in profit and loss in the account. But put no more money in.

Q. Now, we come to January 1, 1934, and Fisch has already sailed for Europe. Correct?—A. Yes.

Q. We find the January, 1934, account very active?—A. Yes.

Q. And with all the trading, that month, you did not deposit any cash with Steiner Rouse & Co.?—A. No—there's only a little withdrawal of $80.

Hauptmann interrupted to correct a previous statement, explaining that Fisch had an interest of $2,500 in certain stocks during December.

In February the witness said "the selling was more than the buying."

Q. So then your debit balance dropped from $9,654 to $1,313?—A. Yes.

Q. I noticed on the twenty-sixth of February cash, $1,350, was deposited?—A. Yes.

Reilly brought out that the money was paid of a $1,500 check Hauptmann had withdrawn on February 16.

"So, with exception of a couple of dividend checks and this $1,350," Reilly summed up, "this account did not have a single deposit from July, 1933, to March, 1934, and that $1,350 was a matter of bookkeeping?"

Hauptmann nodded.

Tells of Operations.

Reilly turned to the month of March and brought out that Hauptmann's debit balance at the end of the month was $12,746.

The defendant told of operations in March which raised his debit balance with Steiner-Rouse from approximately $1,300 to $12,000.

After Fisch sailed for Europe to die, Hauptmann said, he found himself forced to draw money from his stock account for living expenses. Prior to that time, he explained, he had used the profits he reaped from the fur business he and Fisch conducted to defray all his household and living expenses.

In April the trading continued, the debit declined to $11,000 and the total stock value involved was about $27,000, Reilly drew from Hauptmann.

No deposits were made, the witness said, but two small withdrawals.

In May also no deposits were made, he said, but the debit declined to about $9,000. The June balance was reduced to $6,511, the carpenter-trader said, but no cash was deposited.

The drop in debit balance in July, Reilly brought out, was to $3,800 and no deposits were made.

"Now we come to August, 1934, and we find you selling off on the first, sixth, fourteenth, fifteenth and thirty-first. We have your debit balance reduced from $3,800 to $2,400 and no cash was deposited in that account."

Hauptmann merely nodded to the question.

Hauptmann spoke of adjustments in his accounts.

Q. But you didn't go out and get any "Lindbergh money" and put it in the account?—A. No.

By September, Hauptmann's debit had vanished and he had a credit balance of $1,242.41.

Q. Now we're at the end of this account. Isn't it a fact that from the day Fisch put the $4,500 in this account in July, 1933, until September, 1934, when this account was balanced and totaled, isn't it a fact the only cash you put in was dividend checks and one bank check for $1,250?—A. That's correct.

Turns to Bank Deposits.

Reilly turned the questioning to Hauptmann's bank deposits March 1, 1932, and asked him "to tell the jury just what they are down to date."

The German alien searched among the papers on the judge's bench and the floor beside the witness chair before finding the records he sought.

"We'll begin with January 11, 1932, a deposit of $125," Reilly announced.

He led Hauptmann rapidly through his deposits in the first half of 1932. A withdrawal of $837 in August, the witness said, was "put in fur."

The deposits, which a week ago the State had been pointing to as funds from the ransom money, Hauptmann casually explained either as "profits from my fur account with Fisch," or "money from the house."

Previously Hauptmann had explained it was his custom to keep large sums of money hoarded about his home.

A deposit of $1,400, January 10, 1933, was from Fisch, Hauptmann said. Fisch, he explained, wanted it put in the stock account, but he found his margin was strong enough and he deposited.

When the United States went off the gold standard he went on—he deposited $750 in gold currency and $500 in gold coins.

Q. Were they "Lindy ransom bills"?—A. No.

"I deposited $750 gold certificates when President Roosevelt told to deposit," Hauptmann explained. "I don't remember if I made out the

'I Never Saw Lindbergh's Baby,' Accused Man Tells Court

Market Deals Reached High Into Thousands

Fisch Supplied Large Part of Money, Witness Declares.

deposit slip 'Anna Hauptmann' or 'Richard Hauptmann.'"

Q. Nobody came around the next day and said, "Mr. Hauptmann you deposited $750 of Lindy ransom notes?"—A. Nobody came around.

Tells of Auto Accident.

Q. Now why did you transfer the joint account to the name of Anna Schoeffler?—A. The reason was I got in an auto accident. I went over a man, ran over his leg. It was not my fault. He was standing behind an elevated pillar. The road was very slippery. After the accident, I was afraid. This gentleman happened to be a lawyer. I was afraid he was going to sue me so I transferred the account.

He added he settled the accident and claim with the lawyer for $350 later.

Hauptmann went on telling of getting $2,000 more from Fisch for the stock account and depositing it in his bank, because the trading account did not require it.

Reilly cited a $2,500 withdrawal.

Q. That's the last large withdrawal before your arrest. The next went to a lawyer, he's not here?—A. Yes.

Q. Now that explains your bank accounts?—A. Yes.

Q. I am calling your attention to the young lady, Miss Alexander, who said she saw you in a railroad station watching Dr. Condon.—A. I never was in there. I knew the railroad station, but I was never there.

Q. Did you ever see that young lady?—A. No.

Hauptmann said he never was in that railroad station.

Q. You weren't there with Dr. Condon?—A. I don't know Dr. Condon.

Q. Do you know Miss Alexander?—A. No.

Miss Alexander was the dress model who told how she saw Hauptmann shadowing "Jafsie" before the ransom payoff.

Reilly produced the short beam in which the ransom money was found.

Q. You put that money there.—A. Yes.

Q. How much?—A. I don't know.

Says Police Beat Him.

Q. When you were taken to the New York police were you beaten? Wilentz objected.

A. I was.

"Just a minute," said Wilentz, "you can't bring such evidence here. Certain statements were produced here and the defense did not object."

Trenchard ruled the questioning could proceed.

Reilly asked how long he was in custody before he was asked to write handwriting samples.

"Night time."

Q. When were you arrested?—A. Daytime.

Q. Were you beaten before you did those writings?—A. Not at this time.

Wilentz insisted that Hauptmann's story of his treatment at the New York police stations must be limited to the time preceding and including the taking of the statements in evidence.

Q. Were you beaten in the Greenwich Station or when the statements were taken?—A. Not at that time.

Trenchard sharply reproved the spectators for their laughter.

Q. When were you beaten?

Wilentz objected again.

He argued that the statements in themselves told of Hauptmann's treatment at the time. He objected to evidence of "some alleged beating at some other time."

"Let him tell," said Justice Trenchard.

Q. Were you beaten or were you not?—A. I was.

Q. When were you beaten?—A. The second night when I got arrested.

Q. Where were you beaten?—A. By the New York police.

Q. Before you were taken to the Bronx?—A. Yes.

Q. How long were you beaten, and tell what they did to you.

Wilentz objected again and was allowed to reserve right to move to strike answers if not connected with the time before and during the statement-taking.

Describes Arrest.

Reilly began leading Hauptmann through the details of the arrest.

"It was told me at the time in my house it was 'Lindbergh money,'" Hauptman said, explaining that he did not know he had ransom bills until he was taken to his home.

"They took me to the police station" Hauptman said.

Reilly asked him of the time when he gave them handwriting specimens after the arrest.

Q. Did they let you spell the words in your own way?—A. Some of them not. They spelled them to me. I remember very well that they made me spell not "n-o-t-e."

Q. How do you spell "not?"—A. N-o-t.

Q. Did they tell you how to spell "Signature?"—A. Yes.

Wilentz objected that the questions were leading.

Q. Was the spelling dictated or as you write?—A. It was because of the dictation.

Hauptmann said he had no chance to sleep, but was told he must write before he was allowed to sleep.

State Objects.

Q. When did they ask you to write?—A. About 2 o'clock in the morning. I fell asleep writing. I refused to write and they poked me in the ribs with their hand.

"I got a treatment the night of the next day, which was no good," he said.

The State objected on the grounds the alleged duress was not relevant to the statement Reilly planned to attack by such testimony.

Q. I ask you what the treatment was before you were taken to the Bronx?

Wilentz again objected and Reilly rephrased his question.

Q. Was the treatment received by you in the New York police station present in your mind when you made your statement in the Bronx?—A. It was, yes.

Wilentz again objected.

"I believe that any man who was subjected to some treatment after arrest before statements are made," Reilly said, "should be allowed to tell. I believe any statements obtained in this manner should not be evidence."

Justice Trenchard asked Reilly to confine questions to treatment during the time of taking the statements.

Q. Were you fearful of similar treatment in the Bronx such as you got in the police station in New York?—A. I only got in mind the treatment in the Bronx.

Reilly finished direct examination.

Justice Trenchard declined to allow a five minute recess but a delay ensued during which the crowd began to talk and Hauptmann gathered up his papers.

"Now in turning this witness over to the prosecution for cross-examination," Reilly addressed the court—He then asked the court to give a week-end recess tonight to permit him to recover from a "mild attack of grippe" and to whittle down the defense case.

"I'm inclined to think that if you take an adjournment over the week-end it will result in no delay. When we adjourn tonight—I suggest we work until a quarter to five—we will do so to reconvene Monday morning at 10 o'clock," Justice Trenchard said.

A five minute recess was called at 4:01.

Court resumed at 4:11.

Bruno Returns to Stand.

Hauptmann went back to the stand as the jury was polled. He gripped his hands tightly. Wilentz, after confering with other State attorneys, confronted the prisoner, a yellow legal pad of notes in his hand.

Hauptmann's face worked, his eyes blinked rapidly, as he sat twisted in his chair, waiting for the State's attack.

He volunteered a statement to Wilentz that all his statements on his finances were his best recollection and that there were no records.

Q. Mr. Defendant, when you came here you came illegally?—A. Yes.

Q. You came here in 1923?—A Yes.

Q. You were given the opportunity of earning a livelihood?—A. Yes.

Q. You were given police protection, always?—A. Not quite.

Q. You have an opportunity to tell the truth now today.—A. I have told the truth.

Q. Do you stand on the story that you gave in the Bronx, in the courthouse?—A. To a certain extent.

Wilentz, eager and intense, shouted: "Did you lie to District Attorney Foley, or did you tell the truth?"

A vigorous defense objection was sustained.

Wilentz returned swiftly to point.

Q. Did you tell the truth?—A. To a certain extent.

Q. Do you stand on your statements as to the truth of your story about the Lindbergh case—the murder?—A. To a certain extent.

Q. Do you stand on your story told here today and yesterday?—A. I told the truth.

Q. So to a certain extent you lied?

Again the defense objected and Wilentz withdrew the question.

Q. Did you tell the whole truth about the Lindbergh kidnaping and murder?—A. To a certain extent.

Criminal Record.

Wilentz went into Hauptmann's criminal record in Germany. The witness said after he got out of jail the first time he "sold some things that were stolen."

Q. What happened—you were arrested?—A. Yes, sir.

Hauptmann told of escaping while being questioned after arrest before jail sentence was imposed the second time.

Q. Didn't you leave behind a note, "Best wishes to the police?"—A. I did not.

Q. Didn't you and a man hold up two women?—A. yes.

Q. Wheeling baby carriages?—A. Everybody wheels baby carriages.

Q. Weren't you convicted of selling some stolen driving belts?—A. What you are saying is new to me.

Hauptmann's face worked as he waited for each question. He moistened his lips.

Wilentz, his voice sharp and insistent, hammered away at the former convict's German police record.

Arrest by arrest, conviction by conviction, Wilentz reviewed the record.

Then Wilentz spoke of Hauptmann coming to this country.

Q. Everyone you held near and dear was in Germany?—A. I had a relative in California.

Q. Where is she?—A. I don't know.

Tried Thrice to Enter U. S.

Q. You got in the boat in 1923 without the invitation of the United States of America?—A. Didn't have any money.

Q. You sneaked on a boat and came to this country, but they caught you, sent you back?—A. Yes.

Q. And you sneaked on another boat and they caught you again?—A. Yes.

Q. And the third time you managed to sneak in this country?—A. Yes.

Q. You didn't take any trips back to Germany?—A. No.

Q. You knew very well Germany wanted you?—A. No. All they had to do was to go to my mother. I was planning to go back this year.

Q. You were making arrangements to return to Germany?—A. Yes.

Q. Just about then you were arrested?—A. I was making arrangements.

Wilentz held a small red note book up to Hauptmann.

Q. Look at that one word, is it your handwriting?—A. I can't remember. I'm not sure I put it in.

Q. What is that word there, b-o-a-d?—A. I don't know how old is that book.

Q. How do you spell boat?—A. B-o-a-t.

Wilentz paused.

"Why did you spell it 'b-o-a-d' in that book?" he shouted.

"I don't know. I'm not sure I put it in there."

Hauptmann then interrupted and said the book was 8 or 10 years old and he had tried to improve his language.

Q. So you once wrote boat "b-o-a-d?"—A. I don't remember.

Q. The reason you won't say you wrote "b-o-a-d" was because you got the $50,000 when you wrote Dr. Condon?—A. I don't know.

Q. Take a look at the "o" (in a ransom note), it's open?—A. Yes.

Similarity in Writing.

Wilentz, up close to the witness, wrung from the alien testimony that the "o" in both his notebook and the ransom note were open. He called his attention to other similarity in the writing.

The attorney general's face and that of Hauptmann were only inches apart. Hauptmann glared back at Wilentz.

Q. You used the word "b-o-a-d" because that's the way you write it in Saxony?—A. Not always.

Q. See that "x" on there (indicating a Hauptmann statement)?—A. Yes.

Q. Isn't this "x" in the ransom note the same?—A. I don't know about the ransom notes.

Q. So you're a carpenter, eh?—A. I am.

Q. When was the last time you did carpenter work?—A. About four or six weeks before I was arrested.

Q. You stopped carpentry April 2, 1932?—A. Yes.

Q. You have been in the stock market since?—A. Stock market and fur business.

Q. The only money in your account you put there yourself?—A. Yes.

Q. And that of Fisch, who is dead?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you and Fisch kidnap the Lindbergh baby?—A. I never saw Mr. Lindbergh's baby.

Grilled About Fisch.

Q. The only man who knows of any money between you and Fisch was Fisch, and he's dead?—A. Yes.

Q. He was your best friend, wasn't he?—A. Not the best friend, but a very good friend.

Q. Did he help you kidnap and murder the Lindbergh baby?—A. He did not.

Wilentz showed him the board on which a small automatic pistol and ransom bills were found in the Hauptmann garage.

He asked him what he drilled the holes for.

"For bits," Hauptmann shot back.

Q. Didn't you tell District Attorney Foley you bored those holes to hide money?—A. That is impossible.

Wilentz pointed to the larger hole, which contained the gun.

Q. And what was that for?—A. I put something in there.

Q. What did you put in there?

Defense objection choked off an answer.

Reilly, objecting to references to the large hole, asserted that unless there had been ransom money in it, the testimony was irrelevant.

Justice Trenchard overruled Reilly's objection.

Q. What was in that hole?—A. I put something in there.

Q. What?

Reilly again objected, asserting Wilentz was trying to prejudice the jury. What was in the hole, he argued, had nothing to do with the crime.

Q. What did you put in it?—A. I put a small pistol in it.

Q. So you had the five rolls of bills here and the pistol here?—A. Yes.

Q. You gave the name Bruno Richard Hauptmann. Did you use any other name?—A. On the boat I used the name Perlmeyer.

Q. And wasn't your first name John?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Didn't you use another name when you bought those field glasses?—A. No.

Q. When you bought that second pair of field glasses?—A. No.

Reilly asserted he would insist that Wilentz abide by the rules of evidence. He declared nothing Hauptmann did before 1934, with no direct relation to the crime, could be brought in.

Justice Trenchard said the answer could be given.

Q. Weren't you the "Cemetery John?"—A. Absolutely not.

Q. You lived near both St. Raymond's Cemetery and Woodlawn Cemetery, but you didn't know where either was?—A. No.

Adjournment time was reached.

Hauptmann sat with his hand at his mouth waiting to return to his cell. He marched out between his guards.

Adjournment was at 4:49 p. m.

Madman Slays Two, Then Self

Runs Amok With Gun in Chicago Relief Office; Mother Is Killed.

Chicago, Jan. 25 (U.P.).—A paralytic madman, seeking relief, shot and killed a girl relief worker in his home today, then went across town to Lincoln Park relief headquarters, accidentally killed his mother, who accompanied him, and wounded three relief workers.

He committed suicide when he learned he had killed his mother.

The dead were Hal Arden, 24, the paralytic; Mrs. R. W. Arden, 52, his mother, and Miss Alice Irwin, 23, relief visitor.

The body of Miss Irwin was found in Arden's flat, seated in a living-room chair, a bullet through her head. In her hand was Arden's relief application card.

The death of Miss Irwin was discovered after Arden and his mother, each with a revolver, entered the Lincoln Park relief office and began shooting wildly about the room, sending 75 clerks and officials scurrying under desks. About 15 shots were fired, police said.

One bullet struck Miss Caroline Wallace, supervisor of the station, when she attempted to wrest the revolver from Arden's hand. Critically wounded, she was taken to a hospital. Two others, Neil Neilson, vocational director, and Hazel Duggan, clerk, were wounded.

During the wild scene, Arden's mother, who had fired a few shots herself, stepped in front of her son and was struck by a bullet. She fell dead.

Those in the office said that Arden, realizing he had killed his mother, turned as though to run down the stairs, but suddenly pointed his revolver to his temple and fired.

Nice May Support Bay Bridge Plan

Tells Women He'll Work to Link Shores.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—It will be his aim, as Governor, to see that the Eastern Shore has an improved means of communication with the Western Shore, Gov. Harry W. Nice told a group of women at the ninth annual banquet of the Women's Eastern Shore Society at the Lord Baltimore Hotel here tonight. He was guest of honor.

This remark was taken to mean the Governor would get behind the project for bridging the bay between Baltimore and the shore, a proposal that has bobbed up at intervals during the last several years, but which has never made much headway because of lack of a financial plan.

The Governor hit this phase of his address after extolling the glories of the Eastern Shore, its historic landmarks, the coveted heritage of its people, their outstanding influence upon history and affairs of the State, and contributions along social and industrial lines. Gov. Nice referred to the fact that of 26 Governors who have served Maryland since 1838, nine came from the Eastern Shore.

Lynchburg Sues Electric Company

Court at Roanoke Puts Off Decision on Motion.

Roanoke, Va., Jan. 25 (AP).—Arguments on a motion to set aside summons were heard by Judge T. L. Keister in circuit court here today in the action of Lynchburg against the Appalachian Electric Power Co., which, the plaintiff charges, has operated there since April 30, 1933, without authority and over protest of the city.

The motion was taken under advisement.

Three reasons were given for the action sought by the defendant: (1) that no petition in writing was presented for leave to file the information in the nature of a writ of quo warranto; (2) that the defendant was given no notice of, nor had an opportunity to be heard on, the application for leave to file the information; and (3) that it appears that neither the attorney general nor the attorney for the Commonwealth applied for leave to, or did, file the said information or that they, or either of them, upon being requested, failed or refused to do so.

Bruno Charges Torture and Trickery to New York Police

Duress Blamed For Similarity In Handwriting

State Begins Attempt to Tear Down Suspect's Story.

the Greenwich Avenue Police Station in New York.

"The witness may answer the question," Justice Thomas W. Trenchard ruled.

Reilly walked over toward the witness chair.

"You say the police beat you?" he asked.

"Yes."

"When did it start?"

"The second night after I was arrested."

Hauptmann was excited now, and his accent became more Teutonic as his voice came out louder.

"What did they beat you with?"

"With their hands."

"Couldn't Sleep or Eat."

Hauptmann said there were other ways to torture people besides slapping them.

"Did the police let you sleep?"

"No."

"Did they let you eat?"

"No."

Reilly turned the questioning to the samples of handwriting that Hauptmann did in the Greenwich police station.

Eight prosecution handwriting experts said Hauptmann wrote the ransom notes. One reason they believe he did is that the word "not" is spelled "note" and the word "signature" is spelled "singnature." Those misspellings also occur in the writing Hauptmann did in the police station, the experts testified.

With two questions Reilly tried to break down the testimony of eight men. He turned the courtroom into a spelling class.

"How do you spell the word 'not'?" he asked.

"N-o-t," Hauptmann spelled out slowly.

"How do you spell the word 'signature'?"

"S-i-g-n-a-t-u-r-e," the witness said deliberately.

Prosecution lawyers leaned out of their chairs to see whether Hauptmann would make an error. After the witness had spelled both words correctly, Reilly made a slight bow toward the prosecution table.

Hauptmann said that when he started the handwriting tests in the police station, he wrote from dictation.

"Did police tell you to spell certain words in a certain way?" he was asked.

"Yes; they spelled some of the words out for me," Hauptmann replied.

"And this writing kept up for how many hours?"

"I don't know, but late at night I told them I wouldn't write any more. They said they wouldn't let me sleep."

"What did you do?"

"I slept in a chair and they poked me."

A half hour before court adjourned Reilly concluded his direct examination of Hauptmann.

Attorney General Wilentz, a short, dark man in a double-breasted blue suit, walked over and began cross-examination. Hauptmann seemed to realize that this man was coming toward him to try to trip and tangle him; to goad him into contradicting his own testimony and finally to lash him to the electric chair.

Admits Conviction in Germany.

Hauptmann's eyes narrowed until they were slits. The courtroom was quiet for the first time today, and for five seconds the two men—the olive-skinned Wilentz and the pale prisoner—stared at each other. Then Wilentz began to hammer him.

"Weren't you convicted of stealing from a restaurant in Germany?"

"I can't remember?"

"Were you convicted of holding up two women with a gun?"

"Yes."

Mrs. Hauptmann, seated at the defense table, bit her lip. Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's eyes were riveted on Hauptmann.

Wilentz decided to conduct a spelling class of his own. He was not interested in the words "not" and "signature."

Produces Address Book.

"How do you spell the word 'boat'?" The attorney general asked Hauptmann.

"B-o-a-t," the witness replied.

Wilentz then produced the red-backed address book.

In the brief cross-examination that he got in before court adjourned until Monday, Wilentz began his attempt to tear down Hauptmann's story that all the blame for the kidnaping belongs to Fisch.

He has in reserve Hannah and Pincus Fisch—sister and brother of the dead man—who are ready to swear that Isador died in poverty and therefore could not have collected the $50,000 of blood money from Lindbergh.

Before cross-examination began Reilly led his witness through a careful denial of the Lindbergh crime. Every word that fell from Hauptmann's lips was an indirect accusation against Fisch.

Hauptmann's Story.

This is what Hauptmann says happened:

Fisch knew he was close to death. He and Hauptmann had been partners in the fur business and they had entered into an agreement to play the stock market together. Question after question and answer after answer pounded home the fact that Fisch was a man of wealth. Fisch put up most of the money for the stock market deals. Fisch organized the fur business.

And Bruno Richard Hauptmann was a frugal, hard-working carpenter who had managed to save $5,000.

In the latter part of November, 1933, Fisch came to the Hauptmann home. He carried two suitcases, Hauptmann said, and under his arm was a shoebox.

"We went to the kitchen," Hauptmann said, "Fisch said to me 'I have something here; if you don't mind, take care of it for me.' I put the shoebox in a broom closet in the kitchen."

"How long did the box remain there before you opened it?" Reilly asked.

"Middle of August, 1934."

"Now tell us what happened."

Tells of Finding Money.

Hauptmann turned and faced the jury:

"In the middle of August, 1934, it was a Sunday and nasty weather outside. I looked for a broom in the closet. I hit the shoebox with a broom handle. The shoe box was wet. Some pipes that carry steam or water connected with the ventilator, had dropped water on the shoe box. Some more water had leaked into the closet from the roof. I hit the box with the broom handle and the box broke. I saw money."

"Did you take the box down?"

"Yes, I take the box down and put the money in a tin pail. Then I take the money out to the garage and put it in a basket. I put the basket up on a shelf near the roof of the garage and cover it with a board."

It was Lindbergh ransom money, neatly wrapped in newspapers. Apparently it made no impression on Hauptmann at the time, because he said he did not count the money.

"Was Fisch dead at the time?" Reilly asked.

"Yes."

Reilly walked to a table and picked up something white and fleecy. He held it out to Hauptmann. It was the sleeping suit that was ripped from the Lindbergh baby and later sent to Jafsie by the kidnaper to prove that $50,000 was being paid to the right person. Hauptmann slid back in his chair as Reilly walked toward him with the garment.

Says He Never Saw Baby.

"Did you take this sleeping suit off baby Lindbergh?" Reilly asked.

"I never saw Baby Lindbergh," Hauptmann replied, and then added hastily:

". . . alive or dead."

Lindbergh stared into the eyes of the man on the witness stand. Hauptmann watched Reilly closely while the lawyer put down the sleeping suit and picked up Baby Lindbergh's thumbguard.

"Did you ever see this thumbguard?"

"No, I didn't," Hauptmann answered.

"Hauptmann, on the night of March 1, 1932, were you on the estate of Col. Lindbergh?"

"I was not."

"On the night of March 1, 1932, did you kidnap Charles A. Lindbergh, jr.?"

"I did not."

"On the night of March 1, 1932, did you leave on the nursery window a note?"

"I wasn't there at all."

"Hauptmann, you never saw the Lindbergh baby in your life, did you?"

"I never saw it at all."

Scoffs at Ladder.

Then the witness told how on the night of the kidnaping he went to a bakery in the Bronx where his wife worked and escorted her home. On the night the ransom was paid, he said, he was attending a party in his own home.

All this was told in a grave, serious voice, but when the battered ladder that was abandoned on the Lindbergh estate was carried into court, Hauptmann smiled.

"Hauptmann," said Reilly, "did you build this ladder?"

Hauptmann's lips widened into a grin, as he looked at the crude ladder. Then he said:

"I am a carpenter."

"You never built this ladder, then?"

"No."

"Come down off the witness stand," Reilly said, "and look at this ladder."

It was leaning against the wall.

Hauptmann walked over and picked up the second section of the ladder and studied it. The same grin came back to his face.

"It looks like a music box," he said.

Monday probably will bring the liveliest session the trial has ever seen. The State says it has a list of 80 major contradictions in Hauptmann's own story.

The defendant has the week-end to build up stamina for the ordeal he must undergo when Wilentz again opens fire.

Treasury Issue Of 11.5 Billions Voted in House

Inflationists Lose in Move to Substitute Currency for Securities.

Inflationists were rounted in their first test of the new session yesterday as the House passed, 152 to 30, a bill authorizing issuance by the Treasury of more than $11,500,000,000 in new obligations.

Administration spokesmen explained the measure is intended to permit flexible and economical Government financing and to meet Federal expenditures. It will have no effect on the total debt of Uncle Sam.

Little serious resistance was offered as the proposal was jammed through the lower chamber under White House orders for speed. Need for prompt action was emphasized by Secretary Morgenthau at committee hearings earlier in the week.

The first expansionist flurry came when Representative Patman (Democrat), Texas, author of the bonus bill, advanced an amendment to compel the Treasury to issue new currency instead of bonds. His move was crushed, 91 to 32.

"Baby Bonds" Provided.

Representative Dies (Democrat), Texas, championed a change which would have required the Government to expand its currency to provide backing for the proposed new securities. The proposal was killed by a voice vote. A second amendment by Patman to cut the interest rate on Government bonds was shouted down.

As sent to the Senate, the measure would authorize the Treasury Secretary to issue $11,525,052,350 in new bonds. A portion of that issue would be "baby bonds," so named because they would be of as low as $25 denomination. They would be offered for sale to the man in the street.

The tiny bonds, under the bill, would mature in from 10 to 20 years and would bear a maximum of 3 per cent compound interest. No person could buy more than $10,000 worth of these tax exempt bonds a year. They would be cashable every six months by the holders.

2½ Per Cent Interest Planned.

Debate indicated the Treasury hoped to pay 2½ per cent interest in testing the plan.

The bill amends the second Liberty bond act. Under that law an aggregate of $28,000,000,000 in bonds could be issued. Exactly $25,450,487,115 of such securities were issued and $11,975,539,465 have been retired.

Some $13,000,000,000 in bonds are outstanding under the second Liberty loan act. The new measure would make authority for future bond action flexible instead of fixed.

'Monkey Bill' Fought By 'Baby' Legislator

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 25 (AP).—A bill to repeal Tennessee's famed "anti-evolution" statute was introduced in the House today by Cecil Anderson (Chester), a 22-year-old Vanderbilt University student and the youngest member of the State Legislature.

The statute, from which grew the Dayton, Tenn., "monkey trial," was enacted in 1925. It prohibits the teaching of evolution in schools of the State.

Rival Theories Worry Leaders Over Bank Law

President Sees Aids, Keeps Silence on Proposals for Centralization.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Due to conflict within New Deal ranks as well as a sharp cleavage of viewpoints on Capitol Hill, the scope of the Administration's banking program for this session of Congress has become uncertain, it developed yesterday.

President Roosevelt yesterday conferred with a group of his banking advisers over whether substantial changes in the Federal Reserve system should be recommended to Congress or the program should deal only with proposals of a comparatively unimportant nature designed to tighten up existing law.

The outcome of the conference was not revealed, but it is known that those responsible for the Administration's course are in an uncertain—and somewhat unhappy—frame of mind regarding banking legislation. Meanwhile, publication of proposals projected by the different groups seeking to have their ideas adopted have caused widespread confusion as to what is in store for the banking community.

FDIC Seeks More Power.

Meanwhile, the directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation have completed the draft of a bill which is described as chiefly seeking to correct gaps in its legislation and strengthen its powers. This measure, it is understood, would leave the corporation a separate agency, although there have been proposals to merge it with the office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, also has prepared for Congress recommendations for some minor changes in the national banking act, over which he has jurisdiction. He will submit his proposals within a few days as a part of his annual report.

These legislative proposals, however, are not those causing concern. The question causing anxiety in some cases and a wrinkling of brows in others is whether steps should be taken now to give the Federal Reserve Board a more centralized authority over the Reserve System. In fact, it is held, if some of the proposals being discussed are adopted the Reserve System would approximate a central banking system in everything except name.

These proposals include:

Merging the duties of the Federal Reserve agents at each of the 12 banks with those of the Governor and making the latter an appointee of the Washington board instead of the Reserve Bank directors as at present.

Market Control Proposed.

Giving the Reserve Board complete authority over open market operations—the purchase or sale by Reserve Banks of Government obligations (at present any Reserve Bank may refuse to participate in an open market operation).

Giving the board authority to initiate changes in rediscount rates of Reserve Banks, over which it now has only a veto authority.

Elimination from the reserve act of the limitation regarding the maturity of commercial and agricultural paper eligible for rediscount.

The latter proposal is not in the same controversial category as the others, although there is opposition in Congress to such a change. The limitation now imposed on commercial paper is a 90-day maturity. It has been proposed that the board be permitted to authorize the rediscounting of paper with a maturity of six months or longer.

President Withholds Approval.

None of these proposals, it may be authoritatively said, have been accepted by the President, although they have been pressed by persons high in the Administration and at various times have been discussed by the Reserve Board. The latter body, it is understood, is divided as to the need for such sweeping changes in existing law.

The opposition which is worrying the sponsors of this tentative program, however, is that which exists on Capitol Hill. There the Administration is confronted by a difficult situation. The program outlined will be strenuously opposed by the Glass conservatives—but it will also displease the Thomas left-wingers because of its comparative mildness.

The Administration strategists feel they can eventually defeat the conservative bloc but they are not sure that once they throw the banking laws open for amendment they can beat back the left-wing inflationists and monetary experimenters, who want a Government-owned central bank.

Meanwhile the decision to hold hearings on the nomination of Gov. Marriner S. Eccles as chief of the reserve board has further complicated the situation. Mr. Eccles will be given a sharp quizzing by the Glass sub-committee, after being kept on the waiting bench for sometime. Whatever he says or proposes may be used against him. Thus, it has been hinted, the Administration had better withhold its banking program until Mr. Eccles is confirmed.

Agreement Expected.

With the return to Washington of Ambassador Troyanovsky, the State Department is scheduled to resume negotiations for a workable settlement of the Soviet-American debt and trade problems. Having made a special trip to Moscow fully to acquaint his government with the progress of the negotiations and to obtain further instructions, Mr. Troyanovsky should be in a position to make any concessions necessary to bring the conversations to an early climax. Likewise officials at the State Department have had ample opportunity to review the whole situation with the object of terminating discussions already too long protracted.

More than a year has passed since negotiations on this difficult subject were begun in Moscow. The impediments which have been encountered emphasize the preliminary nature of the understanding which was reached in conferences between President Roosevelt and Foreign Minister Litvinoff prior to recognition of the Soviet government. It is unfortunate that so much time has been required to iron out these differences. But both sides have manifested a great deal of patience and determination to succeed. A final solution may now be confidently expected.

At the time negotiations were suspended in October the two governments were by no means hopelessly remote in their points of view. In the interim each has had an opportunity to note the mutual losses resulting from disagreement. New approaches to the most formidable obstacles may have been devised. And of course both sides will be encouraged to find agreement by knowledge of the fact that failure now might frustrate hopes for improved economic relations for a number of years.

"The Proper Time."

Members of the Civil Service Commission paid a visit to the White House on Wednesday, apparently with the object of reviving the much-abused policy of choosing Government employes on the basis of merit. President Roosevelt assured them, according to reports, that agencies of the New Deal will become subjected to regulations of the civil service "at the proper time."

No interpretation of the qualifying phrase is available. In view of the fact that the Government has launched difficult enterprises of banking, business control, agricultural experimentation, and whatnot, it would seem that the proper time for extension of the merit system was when the personnel of these agencies was being chosen. But the politicians decreed that these new organizations should serve the double purpose of carrying out the recovery program and providing jobs for faithful partisans. Now the Administration is confronted by the serious problem of placing them under civil service rules without perpetuating inefficiency and partisan service.

What does the President mean, therefore, by "the proper time?" From the viewpoint of fairness and competent service "the proper time" has long since passed. If the President is waiting until the status of these agencies is changed from temporary to permanent, "the proper time" for many of them should never come.

In these circumstances there seems to be more than a hint that the time for extension of the merit system will not be "proper" until the new members of Congress have had a little more time to find berths for constituents who fought valiantly in the last campaign.

Inquiry Or Prosecution?

Anybody who has ever studied procedure at hearings of congressional investigating committees will respect the refusal of Clinton L. Bardo, former president of the New York Shipbuilding Co., to waive his rights to answer questions that might be used against him in case of later prosecution.

There can be no condoning of the shady and shameless practices which the Senate Munitions Committee is seeking to track down. But there should be a public demand that committees of this sort concentrate more on investigation and less on inquisition. As Mr. Bardo says, innocent transactions are frequently made to appear sinister or illegal, and the victim of these tactics is denied the opportunity to be represented by counsel or to defend himself against implied charges of wrongdoing. Under such circumstances, a man with nothing to conceal may, nevertheless, feel that it would be foolhardy to submit unreservedly to interrogation which seems designed rather to persecute than to elicit facts.

Bullying and intimidation of witnesses, indefensible in a court of law, can not be regarded as either constructive or admirable procedure when employed to confuse and harass those who appear to give information to supposedly impartial investigators. Hearings conducted in an atmosphere of ill will and general suspicion are very apt to result in prejudiced findings. As a result, many congressional investigations, which ought to constitute a valuable basis for remedial legislative action, degenerate into exhibitions of political showmanship with little or no enduring value.

A "Liberalized" RFC.

The House Banking Committee is said to favor "liberalization" of that section of the RFC Act authorizing direct loans to industry for provision of working capital. Under the present law such advances must be adequately secured, but the proposed amendment would permit the corporation to accept security that would only reasonably assure repayment by the borrower.

This so-called "liberalization" of lending policies would in practice result in abolition of the most indispensable safeguards against dissipation of public funds. If it should lead to reconsideration of a large number of loan applications, previously rejected, as Chairman Jones believes, it would encourage a reckless dissipation of public funds at the expense of taxpayers by increasing political pressure to accept unsound credit risks.

There is little reason to believe that any considerable expansion of direct loans to industry is likely to occur, either through the RFC or the Federal Reserve Banks, so long as these agencies continue to demand adequate security and insist upon the solvency of prospective borrowers. When the hue and cry was first raised about the lack of intermediate credit accommodation for worthy borrowers many skeptics asserted that most good credit risks were already able to satisfy their needs through existing banking channels. The experiences of recent months, since the RFC and the Reserve Banks entered the field of direct lending, amply support these views. Up to the close of 1934, the RFC had actually disbursed less than $7,000,000 for such purposes, and the record of the Federal Reserve Banks has been equally disappointing.

Of course, complaints have been made that the trouble lies with the dispensers of loans, not with the would-be borrowers. Hence the constant cry for more reckless lending policies. Fortunately an investigation was made a short time ago in the Seventh Federal Reserve District to determine whether there was in fact a lack of bank credit available to business men who could offer reasonable assurance of repayment. While the investigators, Charles O. Hardy and Jacob Viner, thought there was some unsatisfied demand, they concluded that it was smaller than generally believed. Furthermore, their inquiries threw much-needed light upon the reasons why neither the RFC nor the local Federal Reserve Bank had been able to place any substantial volume of loans in the Chicago district.

In most cases "inadequate security" is the reason for rejecting applications. "Refusal to lend on the security of unpledged current assets and character rating," it is said, "is probably the most important source of widespread complaint that the standards of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are more strict than those of commercial banks." Nevertheless, the investigators admit that the requirement of "adequate security" constitutes a necessary protection to a Government agency which must take precautions with which a private commercial bank may often safely dispense.

If the RFC lending policy is to be "liberalized," therefore, to make funds available merely upon "reasonable" assurances of repayment, we may expect to see that organization besieged by plundering politicians eager to secure easy credits provided by the Federal Government. For the sake of consistency, if for no better reason, an Administration that has shown such great solicitude to protect private investors against loss by passing the Securities Act, should show equal regard for American taxpayers called upon to cover losses resulting from reckless investment of public funds.

A Popular Model.

Discussion of lawlessness in Washington has long been a favorite pastime for some members of Congress. Orators have inveighed against the crime record of the Capital City as regularly as appropriation committees have sliced from the local budget the funds needed for the employment of an adequate police force. When a House committee launches a really constructive inquiry into the local system of law enforcement, therefore, surprise is pleasantly mingled with appreciation.

Congressman Randolph gives assurance that his committee intends to conduct the "most complete and unbiased inquiry which has ever been made in this field." He believes that a thorough investigation of lawlessness in the District will be of national as well as local significance. Apparently the committee's objective is a clean-up of the criminal element that would furnish an example to the entire country. If so, its work becomes doubly important.

Washington is often considered a model city from many different angles. Congressmen who devise panaceas are frequently anxious to try them out in the Capital City first. The District is regarded as a sort of experiment station, sometimes to the detriment of its residents. But no one seems to have been much concerned about making Washington a model of law and order. Of all the fields in which the Capital has been selected to serve as an example to other municipalities this appears to be the most fruitful.

In some respects Washington is unique among American cities. But the need for efficient measures against crime here is not essentially different from the law enforcement problem confronting hundreds of other municipalities. Mr. Randolph's committee has a rare opportunity of exploring the sources of crime and prescribing remedies which would be universally effective. Certainly the people of Washington would be delighted to have this city become a model community in this respect.

A Careful Guardian.

Echoes of the oil scandal which rocked the country during the early '20s have been revived by Secretary Ickes. With a sweeping move he has reversed the decision of the late Albert B. Fall and claimed title for the Government to the Elk Hills oil lands in California. In some respects the decision seems to be as typical of Mr. Ickes' administration in the Interior Department as was the previous decision typical of that disgraceful period in our history symbolized by Teapot Dome.

Of course the Ickes decision does not dispose of the issue. No doubt the courts will be called upon to write the last chapter in this controversy. But the present Secretary of the Interior has investigated the case thoroughly and conscientiously. And if any doubt exists, he has resolved it in favor of the public interest. There is a vast difference between this attitude and the casual manner, to say the least, in which former Secretary Fall turned over these rich natural resources to private companies.

In administering the public works fund, as well as in looking after the national assets entrusted to the care of his department, the rigid honesty of Secretary Ickes has been admirable. His judgment is frequently questioned, his integrity never. No doubt his administration of the PWA can be justly criticized from a number of viewpoints. But a great deal of the resentment against him, which appears to be growing on Capitol Hill, can be traced to his rigorous opposition to the spoils system and the pork-barrel method of distributing public works funds.

The Elk Hills decision is a welcome reminder that Secretary Ickes has served as a valiant guardian of the Government's natural resources. At a time when prodigality of a new type is rampant the importance of this type of service can easily be underestimated.

Another Sea Disaster.

With the precautions taken after the Morro Castle holocaust it was hoped and expected that avertible sea tragedies would be out of the headlines for a long, long time. Now, not five months after the burning of the luxurious Ward liner, another steamer under charter to that company has gone down in collision, also with heavy loss of life.

It is too early yet to place responsibility for this new disaster but reports that the Mohawk's automatic steering gear was out of control are ominous. The vessel was only a few hours out of New York harbor. There was scarcely time for the development of defects after the inspection before sailing, assuming that this was adequate. And it is not apparent that the collision was in any way due to uncontrollable factors.

Unnecessary accidents of this sort are far from helpful to the reputation of the American merchant marine. Before the disgrace becomes deeper thorough measures must be taken to prevent any further repetition.

The Same Total.

Almost coincident with the debut of Helen Jepson at the Metropolitan was the return to New York City of the woman who likes to think of herself as the pioneer of slimmer and better figures in opera—Mary Garden. When la Garden made her first public appearance, she was hailed as a charming relief from the accepted tradition that opera singers come only in bulk. In common, Miss Jepson and Miss Garden are lithe, charming, and blonde. There the comparison ends.

Mary Garden definitely belongs to the period when operatic stars were expected to be daring, gorgeous, and full of "divine eccentricities." That she fully lived up to expectations is a tribute to her ingenuity and her flair for the dramatic. She was reputed to be the first feminine sun bather and it is said that not a single bath ever escaped newspaper notice. She never married and is fond of saying that she thinks it would be "awful" to be in love.

Helen Jepson is definitely of the "new order" of Metropolitan stars. Lacking funds for vocal training, she taught herself from victrola records which she sold in an Ohio department store. Later she was a radio attraction and went from there to the Metropolitan. She is extremely proud of her culinary prowess and more so of her husband and little daughter, Sally. She would, it is certain, rather be called "gallant" than "glamorous."

Times change, styles, even in opera singers, change. But so long as music—good music—is a staple product, what matter whether the one who brings it to us is noted for her bizarre pajamas, or for her ability to cook a good meal?

Dr. Charles H. Herty, who developed a method of making paper of pine trees, is now experimenting with a process for making rayon of the same material.—Press report. Excelsior!

"Ideas From Any Source."

From the Kansas City Star.

Neville Chamberlain, the chancellor of the British exchequer, shows a fine spirit of tolerance in treating David Lloyd George's proposals for a huge public spending program in Great Britain, modeled after the New Deal. He and his colleagues in the present government, says Mr. Chamberlain, "are not above taking ideas from any source whatever." In view of the fact that Mr. Lloyd George long has been a bitter political opponent of Mr. Chamberlain and that the goverpment's recovery policy is based on caution and economy, that is very handsome of the chancellor. It discloses a mind so open, however, that there is a danger Mr. Lloyd George's proposals may pass through without ever stopping.

Skillets, Pro and Con.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Harold E. Fisher's letter in your issue of January 19, headed "Skillet vs. Typewriter," arouses my indignation.

Mr. Fisher suggests we return to the good old days when women confined themselves to domestic occupations, a state of affairs which, by the way, never existed. Men have long become accustomed to the unmarried daughters of a family taking care of themselves. Would the fathers, and particularly the brothers, be ready once again to provide for the girls until they marry, and when they do, provide them with a dowry in accordance with the family's circumstances, as used to be the case in the good old days?

With regard to the economic results of employing women, Mr. Fisher overlooks these considerations: That there are certain occupations to which women are better suited than men; that every employed woman, is a consumer of more goods and services than she otherwise would be and she therefore, does not diminish the volume of employment available to others; that it is a social waste for a country not to employ the talents of all its citizens to the best advantage; and that in normal times it would not be possible to get along without employing women.

Finally, let me suggest to women, married and single, who find legislation and prejudice preventing their employment, that if and when the next war comes, and they are asked to fill clerkships, drive ambulances, or work in munitions factories, that they reply with one accord, "We will stick to our skillets." MRS. G.

Washington, Jan. 21.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Fifty years ago men worked, married, raised families, gave their sons and daughters a common school education, and mothers trained their daughters to become housewives, who, in turn, were wanted as mates by the working men. Boys learned what trades they fancied and were not forced to learn useless things as they must today. Ninety-eight per cent of the marriages in those grand days resulted in happiness not divorces.

All this leads me to believe that a woman's place is at home, her ambition should be to marry, have children, stay feminine in nature, and be proud of her home, husband and children.

V. F. W. Argument.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a recent press dispatch from Washington, published in The Post, President Roosevelt made public his opposition to immediate cash payment of adjusted service certificates. In listing his reasons, the President emphasized the following statement:

"The adjusted service certificates are a form of paid-up endowment insurance of which dependents would be deprived in cash if paid now."

In fairness to the readers of The Post and the World War veterans in your community, the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States present the following facts in refutation of this argument.

When Congress created the adjusted service certificate in 1924, these certificates represented an average value of $1,000, payable in 1945. At that time, the purpose back of these certificates was to give each veteran a paid-up endowment policy that would mature 20 years later.

Today there are approximately three and one-half million adjusted service certificates outstanding. Government statistics, quoted by Mr. Roosevelt himself, show that more than 3,000,000 veterans have borrowed the full 50 per cent of the face value of their certificates. These loans are being made by the Federal Government at the expense of the veteran for the compound interest charges being deducted from the balance that remains.

Unless these certificates are paid immediately, they will be valueless to the veteran until January 1, 1942, when he will be able to borrow $30.04. One year later he will be able to obtain $38.25. On January 1, 1944, he will be eligible to an additional loan of $39.79. On January 1, 1945, when these certificates fully mature, the average veteran will receive the miserable sum of $68.50, all that will be left as a result of compound interest charge deductions.

In other words, through mere driblets and interest charges, the value of the certificate will be destroyed. Neither the veteran nor his widow and children will possess any protection in the form of an endowment policy or financial benefits.

The so-called insurance protection which Mr. Roosevelt anxiously seeks to preserve will be dissipated long before 1945.

As national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, I speak for the overseas veterans of this country when I invite every patriotic citizen to support this demand for veteran justice. JAMES E. VAN ZANDT,

"Too Late To Wail."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With something akin to astonishment I have read the letters you have published about Judge Bentley.

Not one of your correspondents points a finger at those who alone are responsible for such a happening.

Those boys, your paper says, have parents and for 15 years these children have been in their care, under their guidance. Should not parents who have so failed in their responsibility be made to answer to the community that has to suffer for the boys' lack of training?

All summer evenings are made hideous in my own neighborhood by a troop of 50 boys and girls who scream and yell on the streets till 11 at night.

Sometimes I drop into an afternoon movie—at least half of the patrons are middle-aged women. School closes—but the mothers stay on. Where do their boys and girls go?

Too late for parents to wail and have their friends fill the columns of the press when they reap the result of lack of home care and discipline. At least this is the opinion of

If Complexity Were All—

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The writer has just examined rather closely an income tax blank for 1934 and I have instinctively come to the conclusion that it is fortunate for the authors of that blank that they are employed by the Government, as I fear they would not fit in well with the business world, where time means money.

Evidently they have never heard of that old saying that "Brevity is the spice of life." Nor have they ever realized what a gem simplicity is. A more complicated mass of material I have never encountered and I hope never shall. It has long been a joke with children that when they look up the definition of a word they would find a word in the definition that would also have to be looked up and so on ad infinitum.

But the child's task is simplicity itself as compared with trying to decipher the current income tax blank. Even a Philadelphia lawyer, I fear, would soon give it up in disgust and say that the income tax law is a law unto itself. Surely this masterpiece of brain work must be that of a "brain-truster."

Infant Mortality.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Here is something for you to ponder over and worry about. Look in the upper left-hand corner of page 23 of The Post of January 22, and there you will find a story as dramatic, as sad, as harrowing as in any movie in the city.

It is the story told by the vital statistics! You will find there about 35 persons have died! This is not so alarming, perhaps, for a city the size of Washington, but the real tragedy lies in the fact that out of this 35 deaths 15, or nearly half the number, were babies under one year old, and 90 per cent of these were only a few days old. In the same report there is reported only 8 births!

If this ratio in Washington bears out throughout the Nation it will require no expert calculator to determine what the future has in store for us.

Worthwhile Expense.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On page 6 of your paper dated January 15 there appeared an article about Senator Bone's speech asking for more money to continue the munitions investigation.

The amount—$100,000—is small compared to the vast appropriations for other national interests. It is to be hoped that such a sum will not fail to be forthcoming, so that the splendid work of a constructive peace character may continue under the able leadership of Senator Nye and his committee.

AUTOMOBILE TAGS, starlings, kicks and—of course—the Hauptmann trial fill the recent letters that this Column has not received. We hasten to clear our desk of them.

Dear Sir:

Will you please help a stranger to get a little ordinary justice in this town of Washington? I am being persecuted by the police because I do not have a 1935 license tag on my car. But the reason for my not having a 1935 license tag on my car is that I cannot get one.

I used to live in Baltimore and can supply you with excellent references from that city. I am sure, too, that ex-Governor Ritchie will speak for me, as I have shaken hands with him at every one of his inaugurations, and he always said, when I told him who I was, "Of course, you are!"

Well, on December 31 last, I drove to your city, where I intended—and still intend—to reside. As soon as I entered the District, I headed my car for the license bureau, to get the 1935 tags. But I couldn't find any place to park it while I went into the bureau to get them. So I started out to find one.

Since then I have never left my car. I have been driving continuously, looking for a place to park my car while I got my tags; but I can not find any such place.

I am tired. I am hungry. I need a little sleep. And my purposes are pure. Yet the police keep on stopping me and giving me summonses and things because I haven't those tags, when how can I get them if I can't find any place to park my car while I get them?

Dear Sir:

I notice that the trial of Bruno Hauptmann at Flemington is going to cost the State of New Jersey a great deal of money, and that the State of New Jersey is beginning to dislike this. And I notice that the trial, widely advertised as "The Greatest Trial of the Century"—a century now 34 years and 23 days old—is attracting far greater crowds than can be accommodated.

Society people, foreign judges and United States Senators and their wives are among the privileged spectators. But hundreds are turned away. Hundreds more, the newspapers inform us, file daily through the deserted courtroom during the luncheon-recess—which is probably the dinner recess in Flemington—and, for such sightseers, efficient officials have labeled each desk and chair with the name and title of its regular occupant, in order that these less fortunate visitors may form a better mental picture of the tribunal when it is in session.

Jersey has long held a well-deserved reputation for its thrift. Why does it not apply that thrift now?

Seats at the trial would find a ready market on a scale ranging from $2 for the back chairs to $25 for places on the bench. The recess visitors would, I am sure, gladly pay at least a quarter apiece; at all events, it might be delicately intimated that voluntary contributions would not be refused. And, with so many actors now out of work, it should not cost much to hire some for the leading parts in an officially indorsed synchronous repetition, outside the court, of what was going on inside: a sort of overflow trial.

Dear Sir:

I read The Post every morning. As a long-time resident of Washington, I found that The Post was the only thing I missed when I last revisited Greece. C-----e B-----n provokes a laughter as hearty as the laughter of my old admirer Homer. I think the article by K--l S----------r about the rich man who couldn't find any almonds for his New Year's Day dessert should win him the Nobel Prize because of its demonstration that both capital and labor are human. And I admire the writings of E-----t T------n because they are never ironic.

But I am compelled to say that your Column is not quite so caviar as it used to be. It appears now to try to interest everybody instead of a select few. A really good Column ought to interest everybody by making everybody just think they are the select few.

Dear Sir:

Being a lifelong amateur student of dumb animals and the feathered folk, may I not suggest that the methods employed by Washington against the starlings are cruel and ill-advised? With both birds and beasts, what can never be achieved by force can always be gained by kindness. I have proved this in the case of starlings by taking a group of ten of them, chosen at random, into my house, last November, and treating them as if they were members of the family. Although my little covey has now grown to the number of 202, even the fledglings are completely housebroken.

Anglo-Irish Wrangle Shows Autarchy Futile

Need For International Trade Based On Common Stable Standard Demonstrated.

By David Wills.
(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

London, Jan. 7 (By Mail).

TWO and a half years ago economic war started between England and the Irish Free State. Ireland refused to pay back certain land annuities owing to England. England said it was a debt of honor specifically mentioned in the Cosgrave treaty, and must be paid. Ireland retaliated with a bill for damages done by Cromwell & Co., said she wouldn't pay.

Heavy artillery opened fire with tariffs on each others imports, and since then England has lost one-third of her sales to the Free State, one of her best customers, while the latter has destroyed the market for her principal industry, cattle breeding. The first signs of an armistice appeared recently when the combatants agreed that Ireland shall in future import her coal requirements from England and in return sell cattle. It is expected that by this arrangement 1,250,000 tons of coal will be exchanged for 150,000 head of cattle.

This is a welcome truce in an imbecilic war. Ireland has not been brought to her knees, and in fact there are said to be less applications in the Free State for unemployment benefit now than in 1932. But the large cattle breeder in Ireland is very badly hit, and agrarian disturbances are common. The extent of the economic strain has been concealed because Ireland has been living on past savings and no accumulated capital, and there has been a considerable redistribution of incomes from rich to poor. It is clear that the resources of an agricultural economy are greater than was anticipated when the war opened, but this is little consolation and no reason for continuing a face-saving war of stupidity.

• • • •

THIS truce may be evidence that the British government is beginning to realize that although recovery in the domestic industries may continue slowly during at least the first half of the coming year, further substantial improvement must await the recovery of international trade. As the World Economic Conference in 1933 demonstrated there are enormous difficulties to be faced before there can be any sanity in international affairs, difficulties so great that many countries have given up the attempt and are striving after national self-sufficiency.

But it must by now be obvious even to those countries which contain within their borders the widest range of economic resources that Autarky is not enough. The difficulty is that before we can re-establish a wide area of international trade we must have some common stable monetary standard, and before we can establish such a standard we must be sure that economic conditions in each country are themselves stable. The international standard must be a means of restoring health, not of spreading disease.

In a supplement to The Economist published this week Sir Henry Strakosch discusses the prospects of restoring the international gold standard. The condition of economic stability, says Sir Henry, is that costs of production should be so related to prices that production can be undertaken at a profit. During the down-swing of the depression, prices in all countries fell faster than costs, and for lack of profit, production contracted. Since England went off the gold standard prices have risen in the sterling area and are now nearly adjusted to costs, but in the countries of the gold bloc prices have fallen continuously while costs remain nearly as high as in 1928.

The sterling countries have recovered stability while the countries of the gold bloc are still in the depths of depression. Until the gold-bloc countries can restore equilibrium it would be instanity for the rest of the world to enter into economic relations with them as intimate as would be involved in a restored international gold standard. And it is Sir Henry's contention that the gold bloc will not be able to regain stability until deflation is abandoned and the gold currencies devalued. This then is the first step.

• • • •

THE second is that we must rid ourselves of the innumerable exchange restrictions, quotas, clearing agreemtns and other devices by which the countries of the world pursue the will-o'-the-wisp of "exports without imports." The idea of international trade is to exchange goods, not sell them for gold. No country can afford for long to receive payment for its exports in the form of gold, which as a commodity is of negligible value.

It need not be feared that a restored gold standard would have a deflationary influence, for if we revalue the gold at its depreciated value, as has been done in the United States, there will be adequate for the needs of the next generation, let alone of today. Indeed the danger might be from the excessive inflation which would be possible on the basis of the enlarged reserves. And if the gold stocks of the various countries of the world were revalued there would not even have to be a redistribution of present holdings; it would be sufficient if the new supplies coming from the mines were equitably divided between countries in proportion to their trade requirements.

But one thing more is necessary. We must be assured that there will be reasonable stability of purchasing power under the new standard. As President Roosevelt puts it, we must have a dollar which a generation hence will have the same purchasing and debt-paying power as the dollar we hope to attain in the near future. This can not be obtained without a competent banking system in each country and a high degree of cooperation between central banks. And although Sir Henry doesn't mention it, we must have a safety valve in the banking system. With currencies linked rigidly to gold, revaluation becomes possible only after an economic political and social revolution amounting to catastrophe. It must be possible to short circuit these disturbances by use of a flexible reserve ratio, or some similar device.

TO review these arguments is to realize how unlikely it is that we shall be able to achieve their aim in the near future. They assume a greater maturity in economic thought and in the use of economic and financial mechanism than, in fact, the world has at present. Is it likely, for example, that France will reverse her policy of the last seven years, abandon protection and devalue her currency?

It's true that if she continues in her present course she will be disturbed by serious social disorders, but as yet she hasn't learned wisdom and is not likely to be convinced by argument. Experience is the only school.

And the English also will be difficult to convince. In 1931 they were in increasing depression under a gold standard; in 1934 they have abandoned the standard and recovered some degree of prosperity. It is difficult to resist the conclusion that the gold standard was to blame for the depression and that a wise country keeps off gold.

But England would be one of the first to overcome these prejudices and be willing to attempt the restoration under proper conditions of an international standard. And even if the participation of the countries of the gold bloc it at present improbable, the scheme need not be indefinitely abandoned. A great deal could be done by concerted action between the United States and the countries of the sterling area. Their interests are fundamentally the same . . . stability of purchasing power for their currencies and as high a degree of prosperity as can be obtained by the maximum use of their combined resources.

The power of such a combination in monetary affairs would be very great, for it commands more than half of the world's total production and its members would include the world's two great creditor countries. In the direction of such cooperation lies the hope of the coming year.

"Make another block, Mr. Purnell. Yer pants ain't ready yet!"

Along The Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

Comes The Light!

ONCE again the President with a clarity and forcefulness of speech that is characteristic of him has utterly confounded his critics. To those who said his $4,000,000,000 works program was shrouded in darkness he has given the lie by turning on a veritable Niagara of light.

BARGERON.

It must make his critics feel right silly, it must. Here they were going around demanding that they be told something about the plans for the $4,000,000,000. The overwhelming vote by which he was given the money in the House does not disguise their bewilderment. They were as much in the doubt as anybody.

Republicans boldly demanded information and some Democrats did, too. Other Democrats rested on the assurance they would continue to get patronage, but even they admitted privately they hadn't the slightest idea what the bill meant.

• • • •

In such a situation as this all eyes naturally turned hopefully toward the White House for light. And, as always, the White House was quick in turning it on, with such force, in fact, that the doubters felt sheepish and the critics downright ridiculous.

The money, or a substantial portion of it, the President said, is to be used in making "men and nature work hand in hand," in repairing "such havoc as man has wrought."

So there! That should silence the doubters and critics not only on this one particular measure but on anything else Mr. Roosevelt may propose.

• • • •

We've got to get man and nature working together because "the throwing out of balance of the resources of nature throws out of balance also the lives of men." Were it not for this interweaving of the interests of men and nature we could, of course, let them go along pursuing their own selfish ways. But manifestly where a mutuality of interest is established there must be a coordination of pursuit.

"We think of our land and water and human resources," says Mr. Roosevelt, "not as static and sterile possessions, but as life-giving assets to be directed by wise provision for future days. We seek to use our natural resources not as a thing apart but as something that is interwoven with Industry, labor, finance, taxation, agriculture, homes, recreation, good citizenship."

Is there any wonder that the faces of those who said Mr. Roosevelt's plan was vague are very, very red.

• • • •

One's admiration for the clarity of the plan can only be surpassed by the magnanimity of character which Mr. Roosevelt reveals toward our ancestors who did not cooperate with nature. It is much kinder than his feeling toward the vested interests and the money changers.

"We should not too largely blame our ancestors," he says, "for they found such teeming riches in woods and soil and water—such abundance above the earth and beneath it—such freedom in the taking that they gave small heed to the results that would follow the filling of their own immediate needs."

He even feels charitable to those of our ancestors who came from lands which because of their lack of richness had to be exploited carefully and who should have known better. It was only natural, he says, that coming to this land of abundance, they should become reckless.

All of this—the charitableness of attitude, the coordinating of men and nature—we are to get for a substantial portion of $4,000,000,000. Looks like a bargain. At least, it sounds like one.

The Post's Sunday Book Page

A long time back, one bright lad remarked that you can't judge a book by its cover . . . and the ancient saw still holds true. Week in, week out, the publishers launch their literary white hopes on a trusting public . . . but if you've warmed up to any good books lately, you've probably encountered just as many that left you cold. With books, books, all around it's difficult to know just what to read!

With a smile and a bow to Washington's book-worms, The Post now presents a new book page on Sundays. You'll find fiction and non-fiction intelligently, entertainingly reviewed . . . and in addition, a sparkling column of book-and-author chatter by the inimitable Theodore Hall. Shakespeare In Germany

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

ONE of my life's ambitions will probably not be satisfied—it is, to see on the stage every one of Shakespeare's 37 plays. I have seen 28, but where am I going to have the chance to see "Timon of Athens," the three parts of "King Henry VI," "All's Well That Ends Well," "Two Gentlemen of Verona," etc.?

• • • •

Among the lesser plays, I saw "Titus Andronicus" at Alpha Delta Phi, Yale, directed by Prof. John M. Berdan; "King Henry IV," part 1, at Yale, directed by Prof. Jack Crawford; part 2, by the Harvard undergraduates; "King John" (fine performance), by Mantell, one of the best things he ever did; "Love's Labour's Lost," at the Old Vic, in London; "Troilus and Cressida," "Measure for Measure," and "Pericles," at Berlin and Munich (in German); and I shall never get over my disappointment at missing "King Richard II," which was produced in Philadelphia one evening while I was reading a novel in the hotel, quite unaware of what was going on across the street. Last summer the University of Michigan produced "All's Well That Ends Well," and Yale University "Two Gentlemen of Verona," but I was prevented from attending.

• • • •

The best opportunities for seeing Shakespeare are in Germany, where more performances are given of his plays than in any other country. About 25 of his plays are kept regularly on the German stage. Between 140 and 170 towns in Germany play Shakespeare regularly every year. In a single year in the twentieth century the records show that on the German stage there were 2,020 performances of Shakespeare; which means that almost seven Shakespeare productions were given on every single night of that one year.

In that same year "Hamlet" was played 238 times, and "Twelfth Night" 273 times.

The most impressive acting in Shakespeare that I have ever seen was by Edwin Booth, in "Merchant of Venice," and the worst acting was by the Rev. George C. Miln, in "Hamlet," whom I have also found it impossible to forget.

Wagner Security Act Seen As Temporizing

Instead Of Answer To Problem Of Insecurity, It Offers Only Emergency Aid.

By C. Hartley Grattan
(Special Correspondence of The Post).

Critical readers will notice that in the following article Mr. Grattan concentrates his argument on distribution of national income, ignoring the much more fundamental question of adequacy of national income. Within that limitation he offers an interesting criticism of the pending social security legislation.

ECONOMIC security is not an esoteric matter. It is available to any one who can secure a steady and sufficient income and regulate his affairs in such a fashion that he lives within that income. It can not be achieved without income, nor can it be gained if the income is irregular in such a fashion that the individual is unable to balance his books at the end of every fiscal year.

Basicly living is, in a business economy, a matter of income and expenditures, an affair of bookkeeping, however dreadful that may sound to tender souls who try to interpret life in terms of cultural values, emotional satisfactions and aesthetic delights. All these can, if the individual is so inclined by training or experience, be added to a solvent personal economy. Without solvency, everything else that life may hold either becomes unavailable or ashes in the mouth. Only rare and abnormally constructed individuals can take pleasure in life while economically bankrupt!

This is, I think, plain common sense, but it seems to be lost sight of in most of the current discussion of economic security. The tendency is to talk about the victims of the hazards of living as though they were a special category of beings who somehow have been set apart from normal living by an act of God or Congress for the express purpose of providing humanitarians with an opportunity to exploit their emotional impulses in a public and unreprehensible way.

The fundamental basis of security in a pecuniary economy is ignored and instead of attacking fundamentals, the consequences are selected for elaborate study, prescription and, in the talk of the more imaginative, cure. Instead of being brought to the fore, the basic problem is shoved into the background, the cart is carefully placed in front of the horse, and the machinery for making it possible or Sysiphus to labor with public approval, is set up. It is, in a way, an hilarious spectacle, but not one conducive to respect for human intelligence.

• • • •

AT bottom the problem of economic security is exactly comparable to the problem of capacity to consume. The figures for income distribution, worked out in studying the latter, have immediate relevance to any discussion of the former.

Let us, therefore, glance at some statistics from the Brookings Institute study, "America's Capacity to Consume." Since security is more closely related to the family than to the individual, for what may be sufficient for individual security may be entirely inadequate for the family, it follows that the distribution of American income, at several specified levels, to the American families should let us know just how many families can, presumably, purchase a fair amount of security, other relevant information being brought into the picture when the basic income data are available.

It appears that, in 1929, 42 per cent of the American families received an income of $1,500 per year or less, or 13 per cent of the total national income for that year; that 92 per cent received $5,000 a year or less, or 58 per cent of the total; and that, as the foregoing figures show, 8 per cent of the families received more than $5,000 and had 42 per cent of the total 1929 income to divide among themselves. It is consequently plain why economic insecurity is a desperate problem. It can only become less desperate in proportion as the national income is more equitably distributed.

(Editor's note: More equitable distribution of income will be of little practical value if the total income to be distributed is itself inadequate for the objective sought.)

The extent to which income is the basic factor in security can be indicated by reference to an analysis of the current urban relief load, which is about three-fifths of the total load. Recalling that it has been maintained that sufficiency of income is in some measure the product of regularity of receipt, it follows that security can be maintained on a low total income if the income is received with regularity. When it is cut off the family so affected become insecure almost immediately, the rapidity with which it falls into destitution, the ultimate consequence of insecurity, being determined by the level on which it has previously been living. All this is reflected in the following analysis of the socio-economic composition of the present urban relief load:

	% urban relief pop.	% general pop. 1930
Profession and proprietary	5	17
Clerical	11	21
Skilled	18	16
Semi-skilled	29	21
Unskilled	37	25

• • • •

AS the length of time during which large numbers of people have been without income, or having had only intermittent and insufficient income, increases, the representation of the groups on the rolls tends to become equivalent to or larger than the proportion the group bears to the gainful workers in the general population. While semiskilled and unskilled workers have been "overrepresented" for some time, it is but lately that the skilled workers have passed their proportionate percentage and it is highly significant that the persons coming on the rolls for the first time in recent months, in urban areas, have included large numbers of skilled and clerical workers. Basic to any explanation of this phenomenon is the fact that the underrepresented groups have had slightly larger incomes in times past and have not been so immediately affected by unemployment during the depression.

The latter observation is open to explanation of great significance. As the income rises, the proportion of it spent in purchasing the basic necessaries of living decreases and a surplus is discovered which is ordinarily devoted, first, to the purchase of legitimate luxuries, pleasures and cultural benefits and, second, to the accumulation of reserves in the form of bank accounts, insurance policies, etc. As the figures for the distribution of the national income cited above show, the capacity of the families of the United States to purchase security in this fashion is severely limited.

The point can be further illustrated by reference to the Brookings information on how incomes are ordinarily expended at several levels. From the tables presented it appears that savings do not pass $100 a year until families with incomes of "about $1,800" are reached, and do not ordinarily total to so moderate a figure as $500 a year until the "about $3,400" group is studied. This is to say, in effect, that about one-half of the families in the United States do not add $100 a year to their reserves for security. By using one's imagination, one can figure out how long it will take to build up a reserve big enough to carry a family over a year in which no income is received, at the customary standard of living.

THESE conditions being characteristic of the Nation at large, it naturally follows that the proportion of the population requiring aid from outside the family circle is determined, first, by the size of the family income and, second, by the regularity with which it is received. Since many thousands of families (11,653,000 received $1,500 or less in 1929) can not absorb the shocks occasioned by the normal hazards of living at their present income levels, the first answer is not to institute a vast program of social security legislation, but constantly to raise the level of income in the lower brackets to iron out the existing inequity.

Social security legislation is merely a tangential affair in the light of the larger problem. It is socially necessary, but of significance only if evidence can be adduced to show that the matter of making the fundamental income distribution more equitable is being attacked. No such information is at hand in America today! It is an announced objective of the Roosevelt Administration, but critics of the consequences of the Administration policies, who base their conclusions on facts and figures and not on reiterated ballyhoo, can not find the evidence which will support the conclusion that it is being accomplished.

Instead, resort is had to such things as the security legislation which is, in effect, an attempt to achieve a more equitable distribution of income only in the most limited sense of those much abused words. When the inequity is so striking as that revealed by the Brookings figures—and no one will accuse the Brookings Institution of presenting an unfavorable case—it can not be redresed by the provisions of the Wagner economic security act. The act is designed to help those who become casualties in the struggle for a living by providing certain benefits, many of them in part self-accumulated by the person benefited, rather than to make the working population better able to absorb the fatalities of life by providing them with better fundamental, normally earned, incomes.

• • • •

INSTEAD of being the answer to the problem posed by economic insecurity, the Wagner bill is simply a kind of Red Cross provision for those laid low in the line of economic duty. If it were true that its provisions were to be operative, in addition to a successful attack on the problem of income distribution, no one would object, because such arrangements are socially desirable, but it is pretty generally being taken as a large contribution to the problem of achieving an equitable distribution.

Curiously enough, the Committee on Economic Security, in its "Report to the President," page 3, states, "The one almost all embracing measure of security is an assured income." While this says nothing about the question of income levels, it is a large and important admission. It is certainly to indulge in a nonsequitur to go on from this to an advocacy of what is confessedly a "piecemeal approach . . . dictated by practical considerations." And the whole business becomes a sorry farce when it is discovered that even the most completely incapacitated casualties will not be able to get as much as $500 a year under the act.

What we need to bring economic security to pass is not more families at the $500 level (we had somewhat around 3,000,000 in 1929), but more and more at levels which allow them to live normal lives and make provisions which will enable them to continue at those levels when past the productive age, and secure unto them such protection as may be necesary against the hazards of life, the incidence of which is unpredictable.

Girls' League Performance Will Aid Deaf

Marionettes Will Give 'Red Riding Hood' in Three Scenes.

'Tingling Bros.' Acts to Be Feature of Program.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The Junior League of Washington, that active section of the Capital's younger group, has not given its annual entertainment this season, which is usually a ball, a society circus or a cabaret. But the Junior League is not just resting on its laurels, for the organization is now cooperating with the Washington League for the Hard of Hearing in giving a benefit performance at the Washington Club on February 8 at 4 o'clock.

The program for these performances, which will be presented by the marionette committee of the Junior League, will consist of, first, "Red Riding Hood," arranged in the modern manner and portrayed in three scenes. This will be followed by the children's favorite, "The Tingling Bros.' Circus," which consists of six or more acts, including "Bimbo," the clown; the trained seal; Anastatia, a beautiful Russian ballet dancer; a tight-rope walker; a skeleton, who thrills and chills; "Sunshine," a black-faced clog dancer and singer, and one or two surprise numbers.

Tony Sarg's Pupil.

This is the first time since last spring that "The Rambling Marionettes" have been presented to the public. The cast is made up of Junior League girls, who give their services voluntarily and who are trained by Mrs. H. L. Rust, jr., herself a pupil of Tony Sarg.

The names of the members of this committee are:

Mrs. Charles Miner, chairman; Mrs. Forrest B. Royal, business and publicity chairman; Mrs. H. L. Rust, jr., scene designer and technician; Miss deGraffenried Woolley, workshop director; Mrs. John R. Mrs. H. L. Rust, jr., Miss de Graffenried Woolley and Miss Mary Louise Hall also have their studios in the same building, and anybody may look in on their various activities at any time that they care to drop in for a few minutes visit.

Town Chatter

Who's Where—and Why, Around the Capital.

Impressions of the White House Musicale Last Thursday Night.

A long stream of automobiles going up to the east entrance, their passengers hastily emerging to escape from the bitter cold. A short dash, as the clock nears 10, to the coat-racks, where the ladies rid themselves of their incongruous looking galoshes. There they stand revealed in their most striking gowns, which vie in effectiveness with the diplomatic uniforms. At this point the guests progress very slowly down the long hall, up the staircase, another hall and finally to the entrace of the east room, where the President and Mrs. Roosevelt receive them.

No one minds the slight delay, for everybody seems to know everyone else and it is a good opportunity to exchange a few words. Princess de Ligne, wearing a diadem and a red net dress, is chatting with the Counselor of the British Embassy, Mr. Osborne; the Rossi-Longhis and the Florescus stand in a group, the Marchesa in a velvet gown with a beige bodice cut high in the back and a brown skirt; Mme. Florescu in almond-green, setting off her red-gold hair.

The greeting from our hosts must perforce be brief, in order that all be seated promptly, but in passing one could not help noticing the exquisite bertha of rose-point lace on Mrs. Roosevelt's plum-colored gown. The dinner guests were placed nearest the stage, but the most comfortably situated were Mrs. Joseph Leiter, Mrs. James Clement Dunn and Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, who were ensconced, near the wall at the far end, on the sofas which everyone covets but few enjoy.

Fortunate, also, were those who were near the walls, which permitted them to stand without interfering with the comfort of others. From my place, my errant eye alighted on the symetrically laid wood in the fireplace. It would have been nothing short of arson to set fire to that masterpiece.

First on the program was La Argentina. Instantly we were all under the spell of her looks, charm and grace. She has what so many of our most supple and gifted dancers lack—expressive arms; as for her use of castanets, it is the most eloquent to be heard anywhere; it interprets every mood of the dance.

Then the Vienna Choir Boys filed in, arms folded in front, and wearing sailor suits; their excellence is to well known to be dwelt upon. One remarkable feature is that they sing some of their songs without musical accompaniment. Their correct but quaint pronunciation of English in their rendition of "Dixie" occasioned a few appreciative smiles.

After the little boys had shaken hands with the Chief Executive and the First Lady, the guests began dispersing while a welcome punch was being passed. Many waited in the red room while the chiefs of mission took leave of their hosts.

New Styles in Men's Hats Are Featured by Revival of Pork Pie Varieties

Homburg Takes Second Place In Popularity

New Models Are Flexible, Light and Perfectly Ventilated.

By M. A. Weiss.

THIS SEEMS to be the year of revivals. Stylists and manufacturers revert to the gaslight decade, and Teddy Roosevelt's telescope headpiece for male hat inspiration. In grandfather's day only bums and paupers strode the streets without hats. It's almost just as true today. You never did see a really smart looking man outdoors without a hat. He knows better.

Did you ever look at your hat after you've spent the day amidst the fumes of gas, dust, smoke and oil greese that floats in the city air? If you want that on your hair and scalp . . . well, it's your hair and scalp, so what can we do about it?

The old methods of hat manufacture at times made the male headpiece a cumbersome thing of little beauty. Today's hat not only compliments your head, but is light, flexible, headconforming and perfectly ventilated. You can wear one and be more comfortable than bareheaded.

Pork Pie Hats Shown.

You're going to see and probably will wear one of the million varieties of pork pie hats that will come on the market shortly. Many F street merchants are showing them already. Don't get a crown that's too high or too shallow for you and don't let some smart salesman sell you into the idea that "you have to get used to it." The right pork pie, with proportions that suit your face will cast back a pleasant reflection when you greet the mirror. The smart new model is illustrated elsewhere on this page. It is lightweight and has the crown blocked to be worn pinched and dropped in front.

Lighter weights are the accepted thing. One of these models has a double brim with an appearance suggesting a craft edge. This double thickness holds the shape and permits snapping up or down of the brim.

Ventilation is the big note. It ranges from the thousand pin-point idea to eyelets. Crowns and sweats are ventilated.

After pork pies come the homburg as the smart spring hat. Despite the fact that these are being shown in good looking, roughish fabrics, it should be kept in mind that these are not "country" hats. Stick to them for dressy daytime occasions.

Snap Brims Still Favored.

Snap brims continue to be the favorite of the populace. Tweed influence in suitings, however, evolves new materials to harmonize with the vogue. Incidently, if you buy a lightweight crusher, handle it a bit before purchase to make sure that it has feel and will stand up. It's a great trick of gyps to powder a lightweight felt until it looks good at first sight and feel.

Collegians still go in for the bound edge ripple brim, snapped three-quarters back, with a fair taper to the crown and pinched in front.

The black homburg is combatting a rival . . . the midnight blue homburg. That black note is a high style note. You'll see many black-browns, black-blues, black-grays and black greens. They're swell foils for your light colored faces. Mulberry is a new color that might take.

In regard to faces, when you choose your hat keep your type in mind. Chubby faces need more crown and less brim, and the long oval face the reverse. Hide a bad nose with a snap brim. A good chin is complimented by a curl brim.

What To Look For.

The illustrations show the current shapes in headwear for this and the coming season. Don't think, however, that you can twist your old hat into something resembling these. It's about as satisfactory as dining on a doughnut, the sustenance is there but the taste is lacking.

The general things to look for in a hat are streamlining in tapering crowns and brims in conventional derbies, silks and opera hats. New colors in felts as outlined above. The entire lack of stiffness to felt bodies and a good "hand" (that is the sense of luxury imparted to the touch). Don't mix your chapeaux. Wear the right one for the right occasion.

Folding Dull Beaver cloth opera hat - for tux or tails
The Black Homburg for dinner jacket or dressy daytime wear
The Silk Tophat - for full formal occasions
The Derby - a new British Shape - Not to be worn with a dinner jacket
Scratch Felt Homburg - for town wear with roughish suitings
"If you appear out-doors, wear a hat - - - or realize you're improperly dressed"
Washington D.C. Jan '34 M.G.W.
The Pork Pie — — lightweight; flexible Sports and country hat
The Bound Edge Homburg — a dressy hat
The Tyrolian - - papa of the pork pie and a favorite country hat of men who like the continental touch
The Stitched Tweed - a current "best-seller" for sports and country wear -
One Piece Top Cap In tweeds and shetlands - Smart for motoring, sports and ship travel.

'Temperament' Is Misnomer, Says Rabinoff

Rabinoff Finds Artists Easy to Manage if You Understand Them.

"THERE ARE NO temperamental artists." An impresario who has presented to the world dozens of tenors, sopranos and contraltos was speaking. It would seem the impresario should be an authority on this subject. For 20 years he has been discovering stars, founding and reorganizing opera companies, and launching artists who became internationally famous. As a result of these experiences he is convinced many artists instead of being temperamental are "spoiled children who must be disciplined."

Matter of Understanding.

They aren't hard to manage if you gain their confidence," he said. "It's a matter of understanding them. I have never had any difficulty, even with the most spoiled ones."

Among Rabinoff's greatest "discoveries" was Pavlowa. Seeing her dance in Petrograd in 1907, he later brought her to the United States, by way of London, where she was an instant success.

At that time no dancer was allowed to perform at the Metropolitan Opera House, the temple of art.

"I got a special dispensation in Pavlowa's case," Rabinoff said, "but for the first six weeks she had to give her performance after the opera. After that, they were glad to have her perform any time. For after her first appearance, her success was assured."

Was Pavlowa, if not temperamental, somewhat eccentric?

"Pavlowa," he said slowly, a tone of reverence in his voice, "was the gentlest, kindest person I ever knew. But like all artists with the spark of genius, she was nervous. Extremely so before her performances, because she was so eager for them to be perfect. And they were. Even now, I can see Pavlowa's genius in every perfectly executed ballet. In all forms of terpsichore, she still dances * * *"

"Better Tenor Than Caruso."

Other artists Mr. Rabinoff has brought to America include Sirota, the cantor whom he discovered in Warsaw and whom he spoke of as "a better tenor than Caruso, even though he looked like a two-cent stamp—no more and no less."

Marie La Salle, "the chorus girl who became an opera star within two years," and Marie Gay, "as spoiled as she was talented," were others he launched.

"But artists like that, who simply radiate genius, are too rare," he said. "One can hope to find only one Pavlowa, one La Salle and one Gay in a lifetime."

He feels, however, he has made another singular discovery in Edis de Phillipe, the 22-year-old coloratura soprano who will sing Monday in "La Traviata."

With a background of five successive appearances before sold-out houses in New York, Edis de Phillipe, in Rabinoff's opinion, "has everything."

"She is the greatest discovery since Marie Le Salle," he said. "She is beautiful, intelligent and her voice is exquisite. And she's 100 per cent American. Born in New York, reared in Brooklyn, she has never been out of this country. She has a great future, for she is another who simply radiates genius."

In this connection he mentioned, however, he was interested in presenting a good opera rather than developing a star.

Mrs. Greenway Advocates Action on New Deal Bills

Wants Congress to Take Steps to End Suspense on Finances.

Harris & Ewing.

Work, rather than relief, should be provided all American citizens, says Representative Isabella Greenway, of Arizona.

This is the sixth of a series of articles on women members of Congress.

(Associated Press.)

REPRESENTATIVE ISABELLA GREENWAY, of Arizona, has returned to Washington, a grandmother, and earnestly interested in dissipating some of the financial problems piling up for posterity.

As she sat in a lobby window, her face serious with mental concentration, she told what she thought most important this session:

"I feel that the President's plan of expenditure in behalf of the unemployed is consistent throughout with the policy of the Democratic Party to legislate in behalf of all peoples in the United States," said the woman who once was the Roosevelts' bridesmaid, and who seconded Franklin D. Roosevelt's nomination in Chicago.

"I hope that this Congress will take the initiative in the first steps of a plan to begin to pay the bills we are so willing to create because we believe they have been justified.

Suggests a Plan.

"I think the American people are ready to sacrifice in behalf of the health of their country today as they were immediately after the war; that they would welcome a plan that began to pay the bills as we go and in so doing relieve industry of the suspense and uncertainty that must be holding back the recovery program."

Asked what steps toward paying the nation's costs might be taken, Mrs. Greenway replied: "Tax laws in the United States are in some measure antiquated. Property taxes could well be considered impractical. The people who are receiving money are the people who should be paying the taxes, instead of trying to squeeze money out of inanimate dirt called 'property.'

Son Refused to Become Peer.

Being a grandmother only seems to add to the glamor of Mrs. Greenway, whose life has been so colorful. The house where she was born, of a proud Kentucky family, still stands, a privately owned museum-piece of a century ago. Old New York still talks of her as a dazzling debutante. The Southwesterners love to tell how statesmen in high hats came to her tented desert of Teddy Roosevelt's Rough Riders. Her eldest son refused to become a British Lord.

Mrs. Greenway thought up the idea of a back-fence stile just so she could be neighborly with the British Embassy. It so happens that Lady Lindsay, the Ambassador's wife, is one of her life-long friends, and so she chose a house cornering on the embassy's garden.

"We're building a stile in order to go over the fence," said Mrs. Greenway. "I am looking forward very much to Lady Lindsay's sage advice in bringing up the grandbaby—or such bringing up as we can get a chance to do with the baby and its parents in Chicago!

"She's claiming a share in it already. 'Do I understand that we are about to become grandmothers?' she wrote me."

The baby, born shortly after Congress convened, is son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Breasted, of Chicago. The family has been holding long-distance conferences home. She has been widow of two over what it should be named.

Farley Names Women to Five High Positions

Party Office Created for Miss Dewson; Mrs. Wolfe Heads Division.

IT WAS RED LETTER DAY for women in the Democratic National Committee yesterday, when National Chairman James A. Farley announced appointment of feminine workers to five important positions. One brand-new office was created, to describe the standing of Miss Mary Dawson, former director of the women's division. She will henceforth be known as chairman of the general advisory committee.

Mrs. James A. Wolfe, of Utah, who has been acting chief in the women's division for the past seven months, was made director of the division. Before coming to Washington, Mrs. Wolfe was regional adviser for the Rocky Mountain section, which includes Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, Nevada and Arizona. She was also vice chairman of the State central committee, and generally accredited with having accomplished the political defeat of former Senator Reed Smoot, Republican, of that State.

Mrs. Whitney Named.

Mrs. Casper Whitney, of New York City, was appointed regional adviser for the northeastern territory and Mrs. Charles W. Tillett, jr., State vice chairman of North Carolina, for the southeastern territory. Mrs. Burton Musser, national committeewoman for Utah, was named to fill Mrs. Wolfe's former position as regional adviser for the Rocky Mountain section.

"This announcement," Mr. Farley stated at his press conference yesterday, "causes me the greatest satisfaction. Since last January the women's division has been proving to me that women by and large are not only keenly interested in the New Deal but eager to learn all they can about better government. The intelligent educational program directed by the women of the Democratic national committee and carried on through the State and county organizations, has not only been an inspiration, but has proved an invaluable asset to the recovery cause."

Choice of Mrs. Wolfe Hailed.

Intercepted late yesterday between conferences with regional leaders from various sections of the country, Miss Dewson, while declining to comment upon her own appointment, expressed enthusiasm over that of her successor.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH:

Three other mothers of young girls have asked me to present our problems to you. All our daughters have graduated from nice schools and have nice homes and an interesting, important circle of friends. We do everything possible to make life enjoyable for them, entertain frequently for their friends, to whom our homes are always open; encourage them to sing and dance and play games and have a good time generally. They dress well, and are invited about a great deal.

* * * *

But here's the crux of our problem: These youngsters come home after an evening of dinner and dancing, or similar diversion, chat a bit and go to bed. Then, almost invariably, just about the time the household is composed for the night, the doorbell rings; the telephone starts buzzing; or a chorus of automobile horns starts up outside.

* * * *

It's the signal for another "aftermath party," as we call them. Up our daughters get, dress, and depart with their crowd. Sometimes these parties begin at 1 o'clock and last until 3 or 4 in the morning.

* * * *

When we mothers protest, as what mother wouldn't, we receive such answers as: "Don't you trust me?" "Oh we were just talking at So-and-so's house." "This is 1935; don't be so old-fashioned!" What can we do to break up the habit

ONE-OF-FOUR.

DEAR ONE-OF-FOUR: Naturally, I don't know any more about these girls' background than your letter tells me, but it seems safe to guess they haven't an iota of economic or social responsibility to steady them, nor any other outlet for their energies and enthusiasms than a constant dizzying ride on a merry-go-round of frivolous diversion. Hence, regular hours mean nothing to them. They have no challenge to look further than the moment's diversion. They see no reason for postponing until tomorrow what pleasures can be seized today.

* * * *

My only suggestion for breaking this habit is to interest your daughters in a more constructive and systematic program of life. They're probably of debutante or sub-debutante age, enjoying so many material comforts of their parents' providing as to make participation in business or professional competition both unnecessary and selfish from an economic point of view, now that thousands are destitute for lack of enough jobs to go around.

* * * *

But they could certainly profit in continued education, I should think. What they need is some healthfully absorbing occupation, other than just play, to tire their minds and bodies to the extent they will of their own volition want to be in bed by a certain hour, in order to be fit for the next day's program; and, once there, will insist upon staying there.

* * * *

I am not in a position to prescribe the specific occupation for the individual. That depends upon taste, temperament, talent and physical equipment.

M. H.

What's Puzzling You?

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

RUTH HAD started an autograph collection and already had the signatures of the Governor of her native State; Dr. Dafoe, of quintuplet fame; her hero of the ring, Max Baer, and other celebrities who piqued her interest.

The family took an interest in the collection. "I'll write to California and see if I can get Tom Mooney's signature," her uncle offered. Shocked at her ignorance when she said, "Who's Mooney?" he became more insistent that his signature should appear among the rest.

"And Carrie Chapman Catt—you ought to have her, too," Aunt Mary suggested. "I may be able to get it for you," she added, although Ruth displayed no interest.

It was mother who took up the cudgels in Ruth's defense.

"Look here, all of you," she said firmly, "this is Ruth's collection and it represents the people she is interested in through her newspaper reading. Maybe there are others she ought to be interested in, but the fact remains that she isn't, not yet, anyway. Let her work out her own ideas and if the rest of you want to collect signatures put them into a collection of your own."

And mother was right. If a child suffers from a dearth of ideas she may need suggestions. But if she has a plan of her own it is better to let her work it out her own way. To a certain type of child any project loses interest when it is no longer her own.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Nearsightedness or Myopia.

IN myopia or nearsightedness the eyeball is either too long at birth or it grows too long during the years of childhood and adolescence.

If myopia is present in childhood it usually increases up to a certain age, usually 20 or 21, and then remains stationary during life. Occasionally the condition continues to progress for a longer period and certain complications arise in later life.

Vision for distance in uncomplicated cases is easily brought up to normal by the use of glasses. The patient's own muscular power allows him to see near objects while wearing these same glasses. He may prefer to read without glasses, as images appear larger without them, but most persons find it more convenient to wear the same glasses both for distance and for reading.

There has been much discussion among opthalmologists as to the effect of close work on nearsightedness, and it was formerly believed that the condition was the direct result of the excessive use of the eyes on too fine print or on objects such as fine needlework. More and more evidence is accumulating, however, to show that this is not the case and that myopia is due primarily to certain inherited tendencies manifesting themselves in abnormal growth of the eye.

It is wrong therefore to remove children from school on account of nearsightedness. Children must not fatigue the eyes and use must be guarded so that symptoms of eyestrain shall not ensue. Good hygiene must be the rule, including plenty of fresh air, outdoor exercise, and adequate diet with sufficient vitamins. It is possible that this regime may lessen the tendency to the increase of myopia in certain children. At least it is worth a trial.

Wearing glasses can not "weaken" the eyes in any real sense of the word, although patients who have learned to see with glasses find them more comfortable and hence become "dependent" upon them.

New Towels In Polka Dots Are Colorful

Dashing Effect Is Lent to Bathroom by Novel Offerings.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

HOUSEWIVES who are going in for a bit of novel interior decorating are using polka-dot towels to give a dashing effect to the bathroom.

Before you make your purchase, however, decide definitely on your color scheme. If the walls are blue or green, why not try towels with dots in contrasting colors? The effect is brighter, gayer.

However, if your room is small and you feel that a more conservative scheme gives it a more attractive appearance, the chances are you can find towels with a background of the same color as the walls with contrasting dots.

White towels with large, black polka dots are so popular one is led to believe that black and white lead all other bathroom color schemes this season.

The towels are large and made of a heavy durable quality of material. Wash cloths to match are reasonably priced.

A "Grab-Bag" Table.

Shopping takes on a grab-bag aspect when you stand before the 10-cent bargain table in the stationery department of a downtown store. Not that one grabs at all or that there's any confusion and flurry. It's just that the display of merchandise is as heterogenous as the contents of a grab bag.

We made a brief survey and recall, among the things displayed, bottles of ink, kitchen knives and spoons, ash trays, flower pots, erasers, address books, paper tape for sealing packages, Florentine coasters, silhouettes, candy boxes, whistles, cigarette lighters, pencils—all sizes—candelabra, pictures, looseleaf notebooks, phone book indices and dozens of other things.

Ready-Made Monograms.

Those who can't afford to buy monogramed sheets and pillow cases, and don't feel inclined to work the monograms themselves, can buy ready-made monograms for as little as 20 cents.

These come in several styles and sizes and are guaranteed to be washable.

Hapsburg Stemwear Noted.

No home is complete now without a full line of wine, whisky, liqueur, cocktail and highball glasses. If you have put off buying the types you need, tarry no longer but drop by a downtown store and see the Hapsburg stemwear which is on display. Ordinarily the pieces sell for $2 a piece, but for the time being cordial and old-fashioned glasses are reduced to $1.50.

Irresistible Bargains.

Everywhere, January sales. In a certain F street store there are so many irresistable bargains that it's hard to concentrate on any one. Unusually popular with a majority of shoppers who are looking for utilitarian gifts are the attractive antimony and blue glass nut and candy baskets. Once these lovely little pieces sold for $1.25. Now they are 79 cents.

Wooly Gloves For Children.

Anxious parents who view with dismay the cold red hands of their offspring when they return from school or their afternoon play will view with delight the colorful display of warm wooly gloves in a local store.

Here they will find mittens and children's gloves ranging from tiny-tot sizes to those for older girls and boys. These are made from a soft fuzzy wool that protects the hands from the snow, rain and biting winds. Besides, they add a jaunty touch to a child's costume with their vivid combination of colors.

Special Bathsoap offered.

Here's a speciality that's a real drawing card. Bathsoap—a well-known and popular make—is put up now in cellophane-wrapped packages containing six cakes. These are selling for 29 cents.

The cakes come in a variety of fragrances, including geranium, carnation, jasmin and orchid. They are available in pastel colors.

Protecting Your Skin.

The irregular weather has wreaked havoc on tender skins. It has roughened them, reddened them, and made them coarse and scaly.

One sure way of protecting your skin against the elements lies in a bottle of skin balm. This is an excellent preparation which is a real pleasure to use. You take ever and ever so little and rub it over your face with your fingertips. It is readily absorbed. It soothes the chapped skin, whitens it and gives it a smooth, silky finish.

Face Powder Offer.

A certain cosmetic house makes a marvelous offer to all those interested in a box of face powder. In order to further introduce their own splendid product to more customers they offer it with a lipstick and an eyebrow pencil for only 55 cents.

Besides liking the package for it's contents, you'll also admire it's appearance. The box of powder is a midnight blue touched off with silver and red. Fastened cleverly to the top are the pencil and lipstick.

This Outfit Flatters All Types Of Figures—Right Up to Size 50

Pattern No. 836.

HERE IS AN OUTFIT that is especially designed to flatter all types of figure, right up to size 50. That surplice vest, the "slimming" lines of the slightly flared skirt, the soft three-quarter-length sleeves, are all particularly becoming to the more mature woman.

There is a jacket too, with wide revers, and a trim fitted hipline. It is the sort of costume that the mature woman wears most, and best. It is made in a wide range of sizes, from 36 to 50, each one cut with such accuracy that it fits with a made-to-measure perfection. Size 40 requires 6⅛ yards of 39-inch material for the frock and jacket, and ⅝ yard for the contrasting vest.

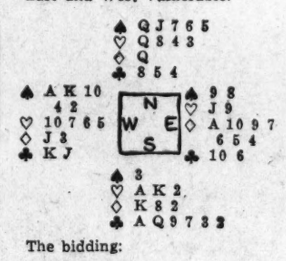
A Lesson in Analysis.

The bidding on this hand offers a lesson in analysis. The first overcall, as every experienced player knows, is sound in all systems, but it sometimes falls into catastrophic sets, whereas many psychic bids on weaker hands escape unscathed. That's why we have bidding systems—which are the formulation of probabilities as to the outcome of bids. West's hand warrants an overcall of one spade both because of its honor-tricks and promising pattern, and in the great majority of deals the bid would come to no bad end.

East, Dealer.
East and West vulnerable.



The bidding:

East	South	West	North
Pass	1♣	1♠(1)	Dbl.(2)
2◇	3♣(3)	Pass	Pass
Pass

1—A sound overcall.
2—North's double is close.
3—Singularly pointless bid!

But the deal proves to be a member of that minority where the defensive overcall is in danger. The double of a one-bid on abnormal trump strength's something of a snare and a delusion. It usually charges up a blind alley, unless fortified with at least a side King as the basis for possible further action. Happily for North, the top cards that he lacks for a full-throated double are held by South in the form of excess honor-tricks.

North's double must be interpreted to show the wildest sort of misfit. With three clubs North can not soundly double one spade for business unless he has some side strength for notrump by South. South must choose between passing, in the belief that the North-South cards misfit hopelessly, or bidding two notrumps, hoping North will supply help in diamonds and the clubs can be brought in. It is obvious that should North-South hold a notrump game it will be missed unless South initiates notrump bidding. The hazard of two notrumps is that South has only one diamond stopper and his club suit is broken. That may be risked because North should understand that the bid is a proposal submitted for consideration rather than a flat. North will carry on only if he helps diamonds or solidifies clubs.

South should forsee that at notrump he has prospect of bailing West out of diamonds before losing command, and that if North has a single entry he may establish the club suit by a finesse or duck to West at a time when the diamond suit can not be run. This play develops at notrump if West opens diamonds.

South's bid of three clubs has more chance than two notrumps of being defeated, and unlike that bid it necessarily puts North on the spot unless he has the diamond Ace and the club King.

What Today Means

"Aquarius."

IF JANUARY 26 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:45 a. m. to 12:45 p. m., from 3:45 to 5:45 p. m. and from 7:45 to 9:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 8:45 to 10:45 a. m., from 12:45 to 2:45 p. m. and from 9:45 to 11:45 p. m.

It will not pay to ignore any form of advice or warning you might receive on this January 26, especially if it is regarding some individual. Select your company with care, for you may be judged by a discriminating person, whose opinion you value, by your associates. This should be a most auspicious day for the development of a spirit of good fellowship.

It will be tactful to show considerable toleration for the opinion of others, regardless of how contrary they might be to your own. Married and engaged couples, as well as those entangled in Cupid's skein, will avoid dangerous pitfalls if they stick to "the truth, and nothing but the truth."

If a woman and January 26 is your birthday, life is likely to be far less complicated if you avoid allowing yourself to become an extremist in thoughts or speech. Conservative ideas never lead to trouble, but the critical ones have caused a lot of it, so it might be best if you err on the side of being overly cautious rather than hasty in forming an opinion. You may be very fortunate in all matters pertaining to the heart.

A domestic life should be everything you might desire it to be. You may not realize you have talents which, if developed, would possibly prove valuable means through which money and a name can be gained. Analyze your possibilities. The stage, lecture platform, pen, pencil or brush might be instrumental in your achieving financial independence.

The child born on January 26 can, as a rule when it passes adolescence, be depended on being a source of satisfactory pride to its parents and a credit to its teachers.

If a man and January 26 is your natal day, if you refrain from experimenting and keep to tried and proven methods it might be a slower but surer way to accomplish the thing you desire. A wife and children should bring more happiness and contentment to you than bachelorhood. Mechanical engineering, manufacturing, writing and certain branches of scientific research work offers an excellent selection from which to choose a career.

FIRST PRIZE, $3, this week is awarded Mrs. E. M. Allen, 2145 California avenue, for her recipe for Graham apple pie. Second prize, $2, goes to Mrs. George Canalle, 371 Charles street, Winchester, Va., for her recipe for Hungarian apple pita, and third prize, $1, to Mrs. M. J. Solomon, 2823 Brentwood road, for her recipe for baked sliced ham and apples.

Honorable mention is awarded Mrs. Charles L. Martin, Berwyn, Md., for her recipe for Dutch apple cake; to Miss Sarah Dean, 815 Connecticut avenue, for her recipe for baked apples with cranberries; to Miss Marjorie S. Cole, 3211 Mount Pleasant street, for her recipe for apple pudding, and to Mrs. C. E. Bable, 406 south Loudoun street, Winchester, Va., for her recipe for apple-nut squares.

The recipes follow in the above mentioned order.

Graham Apple Pie.

Two dozen crisp graham crackers
½ dozen apples
¾ pound butter
1 cup sugar
Tiny pinch of salt
Cinnamon to taste

Peel, core and slice apples. Add small amount of water, about 3 or 4 tablespoons, and steam slowly in a covered saucepan. When nearly done, add sugar and one-fourth of the butter, powdered cinnamon and salt. Be careful not to stir more than necessary, as not to break the slices.

Crush graham crackers to a meal, melt the remaining butter and work it thoroughly into the crumbs, then press into the bottom and sides of a pie tin or deep glass pie pan. Reserve some of the crumbs to sprinkle on top. Pour the apple mixture into the crumb crust and srinkle with remaining crumbs, remove to oven for fifteen minutes to brown. Let stand half an hour and serve with whipped cream.

Hungarian Apple Pita.

½ pound butter
3½ cups sifted flour
1 tablespoon sugar
2 egg yolks
Grated rind of ½ lemon and juice
1 pint sour cream
½ teaspoon salt
½ yeast cake

Rub the butter into the flour. Add sour cream, yeast, one egg yolk, lemon rind and juice, sugar and salt. Knead to a smooth paste. Divide dough into two pieces. Line a square baking pan with half of the dough and spread with the following filling, then cover with the second piece of dough. Brush the top with one beaten egg yolk. Bake slowly for 45 minutes.

Filling for Pita.

½ pound finely chopped walnuts
1 cup sugar
Juice and grated rind of 1 lemon
2 tablespoons cinnamon
4 large sliced apples
2 tablespoons seedless raisins
2 tablespoons fine bread crumbs

Mix thoroughly and spread between layers of pita.

Baked Sliced Ham and Apples.

2 large thin slices of raw ham (¼ to ⅛ inch thick)
1 teaspoon dry mustard
1 cooking apple
Butter
2 teaspoons vinegar
½ cup brown sugar

Remove bone from ham. Mix together vinegar and mustard. Spread mixture thinly on ham. Slice apples thin and spread two layers on ham. Sprinkle with brown sugar. Now roll the ham the long way, starting from fat side. Hold together with butcher skewers. Place in baking pan, put a few dabs of butter on each ham roll. Bake at 375 degrees F. for 25 minutes.

Dutch Apple Cake.

1½ cups sifted flour
¼ teaspoon salt
1 egg
2 good-sized tart apples
3 teaspoons baking powder
4 teaspoons butter or other shortening
1-3 cup milk
Sugar, cinnamon, butter

Sift together flour, baking powder, salt and sugar. Mix in shortening. Beat egg slightly; add milk to beaten egg, then add to flour mixture to make a soft dough. Spread about one-half or three-quarters inch thick in a greased pie pan. Peel, core, and slice apples very thin. Place together very closely on top of dough. Sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon, dot with small pieces of butter. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees Fahrenheit) about 30 minutes. Serve warm with lemon sauce or whipped cream.

Baked Apples With Cranberries.

5 or 6 apples
2 cups sugar
½ pound cranberries
1 orange
1 heaping tablespoon butter.

Slice apples, unpeeled, as for frying. Place half of them in a deep baking dish. Slice half the orange with the peeling over this, one cup sugar and all the cranberries. Add the rest of the apple and sugar. Dot the top with the butter. Moisten with three tablespoons water. Bake in a moderate oven for 1 hour and 15 minutes, with the dish uncovered.

Apple Pudding.

½ cup rice
Grated rind of ¼ lemon
8 apples, boiled to dry pulp
½ cup white wine
5 eggs
1 oz. citron, cut fine
1 oz. candied orange, cut fine
1 cup sugar.

Cook rice in boiling salted water until soft, and drain. Mix with apple pulp, sugar, lemon rind. Add wine, egg yolks, well beaten, orange and citron. Line a round pudding mold with pastry, beat the egg whites to a firm froth and add to the other ingredients. Fill the mold and bake to a rich brown. Serve pudding with bottom upward with the following sauce:

Three-quarters cup wine, 1 tablespoon sugar, 2 well beaten egg yolks and 2 tablespoons butter. Mix together, simmer over slow fire, stirring constantly until sauce begins to thicken, then pour over pudding.

AIR STEWARDESS

By VIDA HURST

After Bartlett Ralston, young interne, politely but firmly, asks her to end their engagement, Irene Gardner gives up nursing and gets a position as a stewardess with a San Francisco air line. Another air stewardess, Virginia Cathcart, invites her to share an apartment with her and Eve Meadows, and Irene gladly moves in.

Virginia's fiance, Bill Naughton, is a publicity man for the air line, and is the chief scoffer at Eve's frequent announcements of new love affairs.

Irene steels herself against the amorous advances of pilots and co-pilots, but resolves to flirt and forget as easily as the men. She is charmed by the good taste and breeding of Clarence Turner, a passenger who promises to phone her when she is off duty. She is really surprised a few days later when he does arrange to meet her for dinner.

CLARENCE TURNER proved to be an interesting companion. Without attempting any of the pilot's heavy-handed tactics he made Irene feel that he was conscious of every move she made. Sensitive to her slightest reaction.

They drove along the beach for miles, then returned to climb Twin Peaks. Even then, after he had parked the car and they sat silently entranced by the beauty of the lights spread like a rippling carpet at their feet, he did not attempt to touch her.

"I'm lucky," she thought. "He is charming and it will be delightful to have him for a friend."

All the time she was demurely keeping up her end of the conversation, she was congratulating herself on having found the perfect playmate.

Ready for Dinner.

"Hungry yet?" he asked.

Irene nodded.

He looked at his watch.

"No wonder! It's after 9 o'clock. We'll go straight down to Molinari's."

When they entered there were only a few couples sitting at the tables or moving languidly about the dance floor. Clarence ordered dinner and asked if she cared to dance.

"Everything he does is perfect," she reflected, following his light, graceful step.

The dinner also was delicious, and as they ate it the room began to fill. The music became more animated. Waiters bustled back and forth with trays and two girls dressed as twins began a sister act.

"This is fun, isn't it?" he asked.

"I love it."

"I don't get a chance to do it often," he admitted.

"Too busy?"

He nodded.

"My time's not always my own."

Unexpected Departure.

She remembered then how he had looked like a boy on a holiday. It was some time after that when he was leaning across the table talking in his pleasant, interested fashion that a laughing group of people entered.

The expression on his handsome face turned to that of a graven image.

"Get your things on," he commanded. "Quick! We'll have to finish our dinner some place else."

"But what's the matter?"

"I'll tell you later," he replied. "Please do as I say now and hurry."

Alarmed by his manner no less than his words, she collected her gloves and coat and followed him. He did not speak until they were back in his car and he had mopped his forehead with a handkerchief.

Then he sighed, "Lord, what a narrow escape!"

"What are you talking about?"

"They didn't see me, did they?" he continued incoherently.

Explanation Demanded.

"I'm afraid you'll have to explain."

"My wife was with that crowd that just came in," he said. "They were supposed to have dinner across the bay, but they must have changed their plans."

"Your wife!" Irene repeated.

Her companion smiled grimly.

"I'm terribly sorry for hustling you out like that, but I didn't dare take time enough to explain it to you."

"You are married," she commented, "yet you would ask me for a date—two dates in one day—and not tell me."

"You didn't ask me."

"Naturally I assumed that you were free to make an engagement with me."

"I had no idea she was going to see us."

"Obviously not!" the girl agreed. Her cheeks still burned from the haste of their ignominious flight. "But you had no right to get me into a situation like that. I'm not accustomed to it."

Reduced to Tears.

"I said I was sorry," he insisted. "I'll do anything I can to make it up to you. Let's go some place else."

"You may take me to the ferry building," Irene directed.

Refusing to let him come inside with her, she said goodby and sat alone waiting for her boat. Tears of fury were in her eyes. A storm of self-accusation in her heart. Regret that she had been so careless as to let him place her in such a position.

"I should never have gone out with a man I knew nothing about," she admitted.

And she had been so pleased with him for behaving like a gentleman!

"No wonder he acted like a kid out of school," she thought scornfully.

She was standing on the upper deck letting the cold wind blow across her flushed face when Bill Naughton sauntered up to her.

"I thought it looked like you," he said. "What are you doing out here all alone?"

"Making a new resolution," she said flippantly, but her voice was thick with tears.

Bill took her arm.

"What's the matter, child?"

"Are any of the other stewardesses foolish enough to have dates with attractive passengers?"

Bill grinned.

"So that's it? Walking home from one?"

"Not exactly. We were having dinner at Molinari's when his wife came in."

He whistled.

"And then the fireworks!"

"Not at all. She didn't see us, but did he hustle me out of there!"

Funny to Him.

The publicity man laughed uproariously and Irene began to laugh with him.

"It wasn't funny at the time, but it has certainly taught me a lesson."

"Never marry the brutes," he said brightly.

"Never have a date with a passenger," she corrected.

The boat was nosing into the slip, now bumping against the wooden sides, as Bill said, "It's a pretty safe rule, although you may miss out on something. Not all the attractive passengers are married, you know."

They rushed up the gangplank and toward her train.

"Where are you going?" Irene demanded.

"Home with you, child!"

"Oh, but you mustn't do that. I'm not afraid."

"Must," he argued. "Virginia would never forgive me for letting her girl friend walk nome from a date alone."

A Touching Scene.

Arm in arm they walked toward the department, talking cheerfully.

"Working tomorrow?" he asked.

"Yes. Tomorrow noon my schedule starts all over again."

As she spoke she was picturing herself riding to the airport in her ramshackle car, parking it outside and stepping into a plane which would carry her high above the clouds.

It was an exciting life and full of adventure.

"I wouldn't change places with anyone," Irene thought, turning on the lights in the living room.

Fresh and pretty in her blue house dress, Virginia appeared from the kitchen.

"I was making ice cream for tomorrow," she explained. "For you, Bill, darling!"

As the man put his arms about her, Irene turned away toward her own room.

"Bart and I would have been like that," she thought. "If only . . ."

In spite of her previous attempt to be philosophical, tears were wet upon her cheeks as she turned out the light and went to bed.

Nice Ponders $6,000,000 To Aid Needy

Bond Issue Plan May Be Offered Assembly of Maryland.

Would Split 12 Million Between Relief and State Deficit.

Annapolis, Jan. 25 (AP).—A bill authorizing a State bond issue of approximately $12,000,000, may be submitted to the Legislature by Gov. Harry W. Nice as another plan to finance State emergency needs and social service during 1936 and 1937.

Gov. Nice today said he was considering introducing such a measure. It would empower either the board of public works or the board of State aid and charities to issue bonds with the amortization charges to be met from the proceeds of taxes raised by one or more of the plans now before the General Assembly.

The Governor, in discussing his consideration of such a measure, pointed out that $6,000,000 could be assigned for relief—$3,000,000 for each of the next two years. He said such a fund would be useful to have, either to match appropriations by the Federal Government for direct relief, or for use in connection with the Federal public work plan, if necessary.

If by any chance it was found that needs in the State did not require the expenditure of as much as $3,000,000 annually after the Federal plan began operation, it was pointed out that part of the bonds could be kept off the market by the State agency.

The other $6,000,000 would be used to meet the anticipated State deficit of $2,229,000, create the $1,500,000 treasury working surplus needed, with the balance going for improvements at the State prison farm at Roxbury, care of the insane, old-age pensions and the replenishment of oyster beds.

The Governor, in his tax message to the Legislature January 16, outlined a method of issuing such bonds or debentures. He said today that his studies were not crystallized as to amount and other details, but that there was a possibility such a bill would be presented.

Asked if its presentation would mean his abandonment of other emergency revenue bills, he replied that it would be in the nature of an alternative measure, another plan added to those now before the General Assembly.

Nice Asks Roosevelt To Address Assembly

Annapolis, Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Gov. Harry W. Nice today joined the Senate and House of Delegates in inviting President Roosevelt to address a joint meeting of the Assembly on a date to suit his convenience. The Governor's invitation was extended in a letter sent to the President today. In the communication he said:

"Our citizens would greatly appreciate the honor of your presence, and we all will be greatly benefited by the message which you shall give us."

The Legislature's invitation was incorporated in a joint resolution adopted yesterday and forwarded to Washington today.

Because of a business engagement, Gov. Nice today informed W. W. Atterbury, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, that he would be unable to accept the invitation to join Mr. Atterbury and his party on the trip of inspection of the railroad's electrification Monday.

Snow Helps Solve Unemployment Problem

Snow drifts in the streets of Winchester, Va., proved a boon for the unemployed there yesterday as scores were pressed into service to help remove the snow. Additional trucks were hired by the city to augment its street-cleaning equipment. A score of other cities in nearby Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia and Pennsylvania also had plenty of work for unemployed as a result of the snow.

Old Dominion Trial Justices Are Organized

Permanent Association Is Formed to Seek More Efficient Methods.

Richmond, Jan. 25 (AP).—Trial justices of Virginia today organized themselves into a permanent association, electing W. H. Overby, of Campbell County, as president; Paul E. Brown, of Fairfax, as vice president, and W. Francis Binford, of Prince George, as secretary-treasurer.

A constitution and by-laws were adopted at an afternoon session in which business matters crowded out several State department heads scheduled to speak. It was agreed the addresses should be included in the minutes of the meeting which will be sent to those attending.

The organization also elected an executive committee from the nine congressional districts in the State, made up as follows:

First, C. H. Shields, Warwick County; Second, Robert Beaton, Norfolk County; Third, A. Taylor Pitt, Henrico County; Fourth, J. S. Gravatt, Staunton; Fifth, John D. Hooker, Patrick County; Sixth, J. Calloway Brown, Bedford County; Seventh, Walter G. Olmstead, Warren County; Eighth, W. Hill Brown, Prince William County; Ninth, John W. B. Deeds, Pulaski County.

Its Purposes Outlined.

Purposes of the association include fostering and developing of more efficient methods of conducting the courts, promoting uniform proceedings and developing an improved technique. An amendment added at the suggestion of Judge Ricks provides for regional institutes at which the justices would be instructed in matters of procedure by State department heads or other informed persons. In addition to trial justices, the membership is to include police civil justices, judges of juvenile and domestic relations courts and the assistants and substitutes for all of these.

Maj. S. Heth Tyler, chairman of the A. B. C. Board; Sydney B. Hall, superintendent of public instruction, and Dr. I. C. Riggin, State health commissioner, were heard this afternoon before the program was suspended in favor of the business session.

During the morning the meeting was addressed by Gov. Peery, who called the trial justices the "junior judiciary" of the State, and W. R. Shands, director of the division of legislative research and planning; Attorney General A. P. Staples, and State Auditor L. McCarthy Downs, who discussed legal and administrative aspects of the trial justice court.

H. G. Cochran, judge of the Norfolk Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court, was the luncheon speaker.

Asks for Cooperation.

Maj. Tyler pleaded for cooperation in enforcing the State's liquor control laws, suggesting that when obviously commercial violators were brought into court they be fined at least enough to make the bootlegging business unprofitable, and that when less serious offenders appeared, they be shown less leniency than in the prohibition days "when we all were sinners together."

"A $5 fine won't break up bootlegging," he said, mentioning the case of one justice whose record showed 100 per cent convictions in liquor cases and 100 per cent suspended sentences.

Maj. Tyler said he was associated with the A. B. C. Board because of the social aspects of its work, adding that he did not believe any of his associates were primarily interested in making money.

Asked by Mr. Warren what the board proposed to do about the problem of county officers whose fees have been cut to such an extent that "it isn't worth the attention and gas it takes to enforce the law," Maj. Tyler said he recognized the difficulty, but that it was a matter up to the Legislature rather than the control board.

Interest Rate For PWA Loans Held Too High

Fredericksburg Lists 11 'Potential Projects' but May Not Push Them.

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—City Manager L. J. Houston, jr., in a response to a questionnaire from the Public Works Administration headquarters in Richmond, has prepared a list of eleven "potential projects" on which PWA funds could be spent in Fredericksburg. The total approximate cost is $232,000.

The city manager, however, expressed grave doubt as to whether the city council would consider borrowing money from the PWA at the existing interest rate of 4 per cent. Although the Administration had heretofore made direct grants of 30 per cent of the amount of the loan, its "dictation" regarding labor wages has offset the benefit of the outright gift, City Manager Houston said.

Fredericksburg has not availed itself of Public Works financing since the Administration was established.

The "potential" projects which are listed by the city manager are: New elementary and junior high school, $60,000; addition to filtration plant, $60,000; additional water-gas set at gas works, $12,000; extension of water and gas mains to complete lines inside city, $20,000; extension of sewers to complete lines inside city, $3,000; extension of water, gas and sewer pipes to Elwood City, $40,000; complete concrete box drain at lower end at Hazel Run and upper end at filter plant, $15,000; storm water drains inside city and other drainage and filling in connection with mosquito control, $6,000; revising interior of courthouse, fireproofing clerk's office for protection of records, finishing repairs to south end of building and putting in steam heat in balance of building, $10,000; fireproofing City Hall vault for safeguarding records, $2,500; concrete wall around settling basin to protect from overflows, $4,000.

Jobless Man Admits 'Slaughter' of Deer

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.). John Appel, jr., of near Oldtown, pleaded guilty yesterday in the Circuit Court of illegal slaughter of a deer.

Appel declared that he found a deer mortally wounded in the woods, dispatched it and canned the venison. He said he had been unemployed several years and had a family. Sentence was deferred.

Youth Slips Bonds, Flees Hospital Bed

Robber Suspect Braves Ice Barefoot; Had Tried Suicide.

Feet Probably Frozen in Flight, Asserts Trailing Posse.

Harrisonburg, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.). Victor May, 21, of Grottoes, a strapping youth of 200 pounds and standing 6 feet 2, braved zero weather and a foot of snow to escape barefooted from Rockingham Memorial Hospital last night and had not been heard from tonight.

May was shackled to a hospital bed, but somehow wriggled loose, made a rope from his bed sheets and dropped into the snow from his second-story window.

The youth was taken to the hospital after he attempted suicide in the Rockingham Jail by drinking a poison antiseptic solution and slashing his wrists. He was in jail facing a charge of housebreaking.

Officers say that May's feet probably were frozen, as they tracked him along a railroad track for a mile. He reached the Elkton pike, 1½ miles east of Harrisonburg, and probably was picked up by an automobile. He was bareheaded and wore no overcoat. The temperature dropped to 16 below zero a few hours after May escaped. Officers say there is a possibility he may have been overcome by exposure and may be lying in some secluded spot.

There are reports that May may be heading for Washington, where he spent the last several months. He served a term in the reform school for housebreaking.

Ice Sheets Roads, Crashes Injure 5

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Following a night in which the temperature dropped to 8 degrees below zero, the coldest here since the blizzard of 1899, highways of this section today were topped by a glassy sheet of ice, causing five persons to be injured in automobile accidents.

The injured, all of whom are in Mary Washington Hospital suffering from severe lacerations, are William Ritger, Baltimore, Md.; Alvin Lynch, Richmond, Va.; John Epes, Richmond, Va., and Mr. and Mrs. Walter McDuffee, Springfield, Mass.

The most seriously hurt is Alvin Lynch, who was rendered unconscious in a collision of two cars 18 miles south of here on Route 1.

Mr. and Mrs. McDuffee were badly cut when their car skidded and overturned twice.

Farmer Stumbles; Is Burned to Death

Neighbor Finds Body of John Woodyard, 81.

An 81-year-old man accidentally burned to death in his home at Farrs Postoffice, Fairfax County, Va., yesterday afternoon. He was John F. Woodyard, farmer, a lifelong resident of the county, living by himself.

The body, badly seared, was discovered shortly after 2 p. m. by Mrs. Mary C. Stone, a neighbor, who was bringing Woodyard some food.

The police version of the death, outlined by Sheriff E. P. Kirby, indicated that Woodyard had stumbled and fallen across his stove, setting his clothes aflame. There was a bad cut upon the face. Coroner Dr. C. A. Ransom issued a verdict of accidental death. Woodyard was unmarried.

While Sheriff Kirby believed Woodyard had a brother, no relatives had been located last night.

Gun Convictions Appealed.

Elkton, Md., Jan. 25 (AP).—Luke and James Goodyear today each appealed their respective two-year and six-month sentences on charges of carrying deadly weapons. Magistrate Manley Drennen, who sentenced them to the House of Correction, ordered bond of $1,000 each pending trial.

Social and Club Notes
Of Towns and Cities in Nearby States

By Elisabeth C. Taylor.

In spite of the bad weather which has been with us for the last week, many of the clubs have held meetings of interest.

Right in the middle of the worst weather we have had so far this winter the Garden Club of Hagerstown is meeting to decide on what they will show in the June exhibition. That isn't just optimism on their part, but as large a thing as the flower show they put on requires months of planning before the event takes place.

This garden club, under the leadership of the president, Mrs. Thomas Harding, schedules its show for the first Wednesday or Thursday in June. The club, although only eight years old, was founded by Mrs. Marshall Wilson with the idea of planting a "garden of fine arts" around the Washington County Museum. Although this object has not been carried out, the plan has not been abandoned.

One interesting work of the club, which may serve as a suggestion to other clubs of the same nature, is the planting and growing of miniature gardens. These usually are planted in bowls or dishes and the entire thing must not exceed the size of a 4-inch cube. Next month there will be a spring luncheon and exhibition of forced flowers. Some of these may include flaxseed growing on a damp sponge and making an attractive midseason table decoration, or indoor forced forsythia and pussy willow.

Scandinavian literature will be the subject at a meeting of the Martinsburg (W. Va.) Women's Club under the direction of the literature section of the club. In addition to a book review, "Ring of the Lowenskolds," the life and writings of Selma Lagerof will be discussed. Leaders for this meeting are Mrs. H. M. Grove, Mrs. George Sencindiver and Mrs. Scott Gardner. The meeting will be held at 7:30 p. m. Monday in the clubrooms.

Maryland Assembly To Consider Lottery

Unemployment, Threatened Deficit, Cause Legislators to Study Revision of State Constitutional Ban.

By Robert Knight.

With an eye cast in the direction of the clouds of unemployment, and a predicted deficit hanging over the Statehouse at Annapolis, Maryland legislators are now considering falling in line with 30 other governments of the world by establishing a lottery or sweepstakes as a cure for its financial headache.

Despite the fact that lotteries were once labeled as a "taxation of all the fools of creation," many governments are enjoying the magical gold flow into their coffers from this venerable scheme of revenue.

The conservative French reap millions of francs and almost cover the cost of pension and farm relief. The Irish Free State takes a yearly slice of approximately $5,000,000 from the world at large via the course of its internationally patronized sweepstakes. Mexico, Panama, Germany and Italy are painlessly taxing their people (and, in some cases, their neighbor's people) by lotteries. Even the recent Cuban political upheavals, where hundreds were killed in the street, failed to dampen fervor in their national lottery.

Defeated Last Year.

Under last year's somewhat brighter financial outlook, the Maryland House of Delegates defeated a lottery measure, 71 to 23.

Indorsement of the measure, however, was strong. Fred P. Stieff, speaking as president of the Baltimore Retail Merchants Association, declared that the legalizing of lotteries, patterned after the Irish Free State sweepstakes, "would be a blow to bookmakers and numbers operators." When the question was debated last year it was reported some race track interests tried to kill the proposal.

As the clause forbidding lotteries is written into the State constitution and can only be repealed by the voters after legislative approval, the amendment could not be effected until the next election, in 1936.

Short Cut Suggested.

J. Allan Coad, president of the Senate and chairman of the finance committee, stated recently that advocates of lottery legislation might attempt a short cut.

"This might be done by licensing the numbers of bookmakers now operating illegally throughout the State," Coad explained.

Legalized bookmaking took a step forward Wednesday when Delegate Walter J. Locke announced plans to introduce a bookmaking measure. The bill is one originated by the late Senator Atkinson, of Baltimore. It will be supported by Delegate William H. Labrot, of Anne Arundel County, the son of Sylvester W. Labrot, master of Hollywood Farms and a noted racer of thoroughbreds.

Coad estimated enactment of the bill would yield $500,000 a year, compared with the estimate of Locke's, which was $1,000,000.

The Annapolis Chamber of Commerce started the lottery ball rolling two weeks ago when it approved a lottery as a means to avoid a sales tax.

Maryland's past experiences with lotteries, however, have been anything but successful. After a list of partial accomplishments, among them the establishing of several schools, including the conservative St. Mary's Female Seminary, lotteries were barred in the revised constitution of 1866.

Critics said the lotteries had fallen into the hands of "the wrong people."

Brides of 16 and 14 Abandoned In Maryland After Elopements

Sisters Returned to Wisconsin Home After Magazine Salesman Husbands Go to Pennsylvania and Don't Come Back.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.). Two Fond du Lac, Wis., sisters, Mrs. Al Marshall, aged 14, and Mrs. W. H. Stiers, 16, were back home today from September elopements with two magazine salesmen after they had told their story to State's Attorney Martin L. Ingram here. They said they were deserted in this city a few weeks after their marriage at La Crescent, Minn.

Since then they have been waiting for the reunion with their husbands, whom they met at Fond du Lac.

Mrs. Marshall was Charlotte Kingsbury before her marriage. She revealed in her statement to the State's attorney that she had consented to elope with Marshall, but that her sister, Virginia, had balked until she dared her. Virginia then consented to marry the other salesman.

The newlyweds then came to Hagerstown. The salesmen worked this territory, proceeded into Pennsylvania and never came back.

For two months the brides had been waiting when their plight was learned by the State's attorney, who communicated with their mother, Mrs. Vaden Kingsbury. This was the first word Mrs. Kingsbury had received of her daughters' whereabouts.

The sisters were returned safely to their Fond du Lac home, Ingram reported.

Dredgers Soon To Get Relief

Earle Sends Inspector to Survey Needs of 350 Oystermen.

Baltimore, Jan. 25 (AP).—Capt. Andrew Johnson, inspector at large, has been sent to Annapolis by Swepson Earle, State conservation commissioner, to survey the needs of 350 men on the 70 oyster boats tied up there.

Relief measures will be taken for the oystermen and for 65 others on 12 boats now at Long Pier in Baltimore. Many of the crews are without funds, it was said, and the boats without fuel.

Probably tomorrow, ten days' rations will be put on each boat. A supply of wood also will be given and those requiring it for boat fuel may receive gasoline.

A serious condition exists among the oyster dredgers, Earle said. The men will be encouraged to use the food and fuel to reach home. Oysters now are thin and it is inadvisable to dredge them.

Rudy Vallee With a Host of Stage and Screen Stars on Way to Earle's Screen

Theater Lists Films Booked For Early Runs

Robinson Opus Scheduled; Substitute for Bell Talks of Theater.

Reprinted from yesterday's Last Edition.

By Sidney Olson.

All you customers who have laid your three coppers in the outstretched cold, red palms of your newsboy this morning will be sorry to hear that la grippe has momentarily claimed the full attention of Nelson Bell.

The dean of local critics will battle the virus from the strategic position of bed for the next few days, therefore, while I shall endeavor to carry the torch, put my shoulder to the wheel, rush into the breach and all that sort of thing.

There is, I understand, no cause for alarm in Mr. Bell's condition, as the last bulletin from the bedside states he will have the whole situation under control very shortly.

To get on with the latest flashes from the show front, we come to an announcement by John J. Payette, general zone manager for Warner Brothers, which reached the desk via Frank LaFalce, of the Earle Theater line-up, of screen attractions for the next two months.

On the Way.

In tentative order of showing, the films with which the Earle people expect to create box-office stampedes include the following recent studio efforts:

On the week beginning February 1, Earle patrons will stare at a little number entitled "The Right to Live," which is reported to be based more or less on a W. Somerset Maugham novel of that name. Josephine Hutchinson, whose rather amateurish performance in "Happiness Ahead" was somehow oddly appealing, will start, with George ("Clothes - Make - the - Man") Brent and the very British Colin Clive in support.

Then will follow, subject to the usual managerial juggling, of course, the first Cosmopolitan production released through Warner Brothers. This is "Devil Dogs of the Air," the successor to "Here Comes the Navy," with the bellicose James Cagney and his cohort, Pat O'Brien, as United States marines who take to the air. Margaret Lindsay will be the reason why these two marines have landed.

The box-office register is expected to sound like the bells of Notre Dame Cathedral during the week after that, when Rudy Vallee's newest picture, "Sweet Music," arrives, bearing with it Ann Dvorak, Helen Morgan, Allen Jenkins, Ned Sparks, Joseph Cawthorn, Alice White, and in addition to Vallee's band, the Frank and Milt Britten band.

In reference to this opus, incidentally, we recall that when Charles Vallee, Rudy's father, was in Washington a few days back, he said Rudy had told him in Hollywood while making the picture that this was the first time he felt satisfied with his screen work.

"Pops," said Rudy solemnly, according to Vallee, sr., "this is going to be it."

And even those of you who decry the sound of the saxophone in the land will admit that Rudy, as one of the keenest business men in any business, and a lad who averaged nearly $10,000 per week since about 1927, ought to be a pretty fair judge.

Robinson Picture.

The week after should bring "The Whole Town's Talking," a Columbia picture, with Edward G. Robinson as a mild and even prim fellow who is the double of a famous gangster. Then there will be "Living on Velvet," a First National film, bringing us Kay Francis in her first since her European trip, with George ("Fashions - By - Esquire") Brent again, Warren William and Henry O'Neill. Frank Borzage directed.

"The Gold Diggers of 1935" will burst on the scene, with Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart and Adolphe Menjou capering for your pleasure or vice versa. The "vice versa" is inserted just in case, and to be completely cautious this first day at the desk, as exhibitors confidently expect fattish returns on such lavish musicals as the past editions of the "Gold Diggers" have been.

In case you care, this is the way things go on in this department. We start a sentence, let us say, reading, "The next item in the day's grist——" when it occurs that we don't know much about the word "grist." Then things go like this:

We—George, look up the word "grist, g-r-i-s-t, grist."

George (flatly)—There isn't such a word.

We—Look it up anyway.

George—Why? You can spell it.

We—But what does it mean?

George—It means "courage."

We—Not "Grit! Grist!"

George—Well, the word makes my teeth grate together when I think of it.

We—Remind me to mail you a bomb, George.

George—Remind me to avoid you, son.

And that closes the incident. Let us press on, now more fully aware of the kind of thing that tore down Nelson B.'s stamina.

"As Thousands Cheer."

The next item in the grist brings us to the fact, a very cheery one, that "As Thousands Cheer" will soon be in our midst. Of course you all knew long ago. But maybe you're not properly excited about it yet.

We caught it in New York by great good luck last summer, and the theater in which it held forth is probably still echoing with some of our guffaws. We heard later that the management stationed an usher near us with a basket so that if we fell apart, as we threatened to do repeatedly, the pieces could be efficiently collected.

With what amounts to practically lust, we await that crammed moment during the scene which spears Noel Coward with the poisoned javelins of satire when Dorothy Stone hitches her way across the stage in imitation of the bouncing British walk laughing affectedly as she goes.

That little bit, compatriots, will kill you.

And when, as advance agent, John Montague assures us you get for the same price of admission the chance to hear the super-singing of Ethel Waters, you're really getting something. In which we concur, although we know nothing of the comparative values of the road show when aligned with its original. (George, if a Mr. Montague calls for us with his horsewhip, we are definitely out.)

George: "But what if you're in?"

Us: "Must we wrangle with you over every little point, George?"

George: "Yes."

Which is why this kind of thing is this kind of thing. (Courtesy of Gertrude Stein.)

We understand that the unusually heavy travel business out of Washington this week-end will consist almost entirely of local critics and drama-lovers popping off to New York to witness Elizabeth Bergner's performance in "Escape Me Never." Hard and softboiled critics alike, we see in the New York drama columns, hunted for newer and stronger adjectives than superb, magnificent, colossal, et al . . .

All that's on the schedule for today, we find, are notes indicating that five shows must be seen and reviewed, that the Sunday pages must be readied for the press, and a covey of previewings attended.

When-day-is-done note—Move over, Nelson!

The Danseuse of the Day

Above is a portrait of La Argentina, usually described in such terms as "incomparable," who is news in Washington because she will appear in an afternoon recital today, under the aegis of Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey at 4:30 p. m. in the National Theater. You will hear more about the great Spaniard tomorrow from Mr. Ray C. B. Brown, The Post's music critic. In the meantime, the line forms on the left.

Movie Boners

Hollywood, Jan. 24.

THE REGULAR meeting of the Movie Boners Club is called to order and the following are awared their press clippings. Which makes them full-fledged members of the club. It's very nice of Hollywood to continue making pictures with errors in them, so we can keep this club going. A flicker flaw can be discovered in any picture, regardless of the care given it in production. It may be in a finely directed picture, "The Merry Widow," or in a Buck Jones quickie, "When a Man Sees Red," which never gets to Broadway. For in "The Merry Widow," claims W. Folkerts, there is the sequence where Maurice Chevalier is discovered with the Queen. The King pushes them into a room, locks the door and removes the key. The King locks another door, removes another key and keeps the key. After the discussion the King tells Maurice to go and he does so without unlocking a door. Perhaps this is another example of the magic Lubitsch touch?

In Buck Jones' "When a Man Sees Red," which Ilean Meyer saw—I wonder where she ever found it—the girl in the story writes in her diary often. This is an important part of the story. The messages she tells to her little book are flashed on the screen, and when first seen the writing of our heroine is heavy and small. However, later, when another page of the diary is flashed, the handwriting of this same heroine is large and light. Now, it couldn't be that our little heroine is that versatile?

Regardless, it proves how we keep up with all pictures. They can't sneak any away from our spies. We even keep up with the Joneses.

KATHARINE HEPBURN in "The Little Minister," writes Joseph J. Zisk, making a bid for club membership, is supposed to kiss John Beal on his right cheek and run away. When Beal turns to look after Hepburn there isn't any imprint of her lips showing on his cheek. Yet the following scenes show clearly the imprint of the kiss on Beal's cheek—much to the ignorance of John until Hepburn calls his attention to it.

In "Evelyn Prentice," according to Edna L. Norman, Myrna Loy reads a note. A close-up shows a thumbnail with either natural or no nail polish holding the note. Yet later, a moment later, in fact, Myrna's hands are clearly seen and her nails are covered with very dark nail polish. They had better get Myrna to hold her own letters.

Ruth Norton paid strict attention to "Student Tour" for she says that Phil Regan is dancing with Maxine Doyle, who has on a blonde wig in this particular scene. However, when he has to describe her hair he says she has light brown hair. Mr. Regan is a smart actor—he knew the wig was a prop and wasn't going to allow a little scenario to fool him.

The flicker "Marie Galante" fascinated Jack Cohn. It wasn't the story or the direction or the acting which fascinated this particular Cohn. It was a trick performed by Ketti Gallian and she didn't know she was doing tricks at the time.

Miss Gallian, acting as a telegraph messenger, is shown riding on a bicycle which is going at a fast pace. But the back wheel of the bicycle she is riding is not turning or moving. How's tricks?

THERE is a sequence in "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" in which Gary Cooper and Fanchot Tone are disguised as merchants in order to gain admission to the town where Richard Cromwell is being kept a prisoner. Cooper and Tone are summoned to the palace of the Indian prince and their identity is made evident. Gary and Fanchot are then given clothes to wear, clothes which are finer than their own but still Oriental. A little later, however, says Paul Crosz, when they are thrown into prison, Cooper and Tone are discovered wearing their British Army trousers.

In "Broadway Bill," writes Abe Fox, who claims to know about race tracks, there is an early scene at the race track showing that oral betting with bookies is being used. Yet later, but not many days, at the same track the place is flooded with pari-mutuel machines for the bettors.

Fan dancing is an art, according to Kate Fallick, and she finds fault with the fan dance as done by Carole Lombard in "Lady By Choice." Miss Fallick insists that when Lombard danced she had the back fan in front. Miss Fallick delivers a discourse on fan dancing and asks, Since when does a fan dancer, who is supposed to have no clothes on, hold both her fans in front and her back to the orchestra? We don't know—but if you do, let us know. The real authorities on fan dancing are Sally Rand and Faith Bacon, and we would like to hear the opinion of these experts. We always believed that the trick in watching a fan dance was not to watch the fans.

Cambridge, Md., Jan. 25 (AP).—Russell P. Smith, register of wills, seemed in such a jovial mood when he left his office at the courthouse here that no one would believe the news heard a short time later that he had been operated on at the Cambridge-Maryland Hospital.

The judge wrote Berman that to permit him continued use of habeas corpus proceedings, "ad nauseum," would make a farce of justice.

ABDUL OMAR, 36, who makes it his business to tell fortunes and predict numbers for fees based on a sliding scale from $3 to $10 was fined $30 in a Petersburg, Va., court after being charged with telling fortunes without a license.

The namesake of the tent-making philosopher who is known to his more intimates as "Prince," claims to be of royal Indian origin. His crystal ball, ornamental turban, and many yards of orange cloth which make up his impressive costume vivified his "command appearance" in court.

William H. Solomon, Danville, Va., saved himself a dentist bill when he fell off a 40-foot trestle and knocked out six teeth.

"I was going to have them all pulled tomorrow, anyway," he told police that came to his rescue. Solomon was less pleased, however, when he was fined $5 for being intoxicated.

"Twins again!" was the verdict the physician gave an anxious father, Jim Perdue, at Lurich, Va., this week. The twins raised the Perdue record up to four sets of twins, in addition to six other children who arrived singly.

The inoffensive oyster is probably scratching his head in his natural hermitage these days, wondering why conservation committees, relief authorities and a multiplicity of other bodies should take such a sudden interest in him.

This week 600 oystermen whose boats have been tied up at the wharves at Annapolis were put on relief. Conservation plans are piling high in the offices of those responsible for the welfare of the popular shellfish. Legislatures worry and water-front men rack their brains. And in the meantime, the oyster wonders in the little brain which scientists claim he has "what it is all about."

Man Shot in 1931 Dies of Injuries; Mystery Unsolved

Pennington Gap, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—D. J. Banner, 29, who was shot in a mysterious manner on a lonely road near Northfork, W. Va., February 27, 1931, died in a Welch hospital Sunday where he had been a patient since he was wounded.

Banner, formerly a grocery store manager at Northfork, was motoring with Miss Edith Conoway when they were fired upon by someone hidden in a clump of bushes. A bullet severed his spine, and he was never again able to walk. Miss Conoway said she was dragged from the car by a young Negro and attacked. Later she returned to the automobile and drove to Landgraff where she sought aid for Banner and notified the officers.

Two Negroes were arrested and questioned, but no evidence could be found connecting them with the case and they were released. The case remains an unsolved mystery.

Auditors' Report Due On Page Power Books

Luray, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Auditors of the State Corporation Commission will complete this week an examination of the books of the Page Power Co. with a view to making a report later of their findings.

It is not the purpose of this examination, according to one of the auditors, to reduce rates, but to make a fair appraisal of the company's investment and earnings. The town council which has a proposition before it to renew the franchise of the power company for 30 years will await the corporation report before taking any steps.

Sandy Spring, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.). Volunteer firemen of this town approached record time for getting under way at an early hour this morning when they rushed to the home of Miss Anna Farrell two minutes after the alarm had been received.

Although the house was badly damaged, considerable was saved due to the promptness of the firemen. Those that were on service at the time were Taylor Cantrell, who received the call; Bob Kemp, Herbert Harding, Ed Davis, Douglas Farquhar, and Chief Tom Hide.

Policemen contributed and purchased other equipment. Each criminal apprehended will be photographed and fingerprinted, with his complete record, age and height enumerated.

Referendum on Bonus Issue Is Predicted in West Virginia

Each Veteran Would Receive $15 for Every Month Served in World War Under Proposal Supported by Legion.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Claude L. Smith, commander of the West Virginia Department, American Legion, here yesterday, made the prediction that the West Virginia Legislature would pass a joint resolution submitting to voters of the State a question of whether West Virginia shall pay a soldier bonus.

He said the plans contemplate a referendum at the 1936 election.

He said he had come from a conference in Charleston where the bonus plan was discussed. Each man would receive $15 for every month while in the service. There were 58,000 enlisted men from this State in the World War. The average period of enlistment was 7.9 months and the estimate total is $7,550,000. The Legislature, he noted, has 34 legionnaires as members, including the president of the Senate, and he felt it quite probable that the matter would be passed along to the people. He also predicted that another bill whereby former service men would be given preference in State, county and city work, would be passed. A bill to abolish poor farms will also be acted on favorably, he believed.

Speaking of the national bonus, Smith predicted it would pass both houses but the President would veto it and that his veto would be overridden.

The statements were made in an address to a gathering of war veterans here under the auspices of the local post of the legion.

Phone Concern Ready to Quit

Valley Service to End on February 1, Because of Unpaid Bills.

Winchester, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—With the Valley Telephone Co., it is a matter of "No money, no talk." Because patrons have failed to pay their bills, it has become necessary, Milton Hite, one of the owners announced today, for the company to go out of business. The order will be effective February 1 and soon thereafter the poles and other equipment will be sold.

The company, which serves the southern half of Frederick County, has several hundred patrons, but when Mr. Hite undertook to collect this month, only 19 bills were paid.

With H. S. Schell, of Charlottesville, Mr. Hite purchased the franchise of the old Frederick County Mutual Telephone Co. last October for $450.

Mr. Hite is general manager of the Shenandoah Mutual Telephone Co. which serves all of the rural territory from Strasburg to New Market, practically the whole of Shenandoah County. This company is reported in excellent condition.

Beall collects milk from Lewistown, Catoctin, Thurmont, Emmitsburg, Taneytown, Westminster and Reisterstown, transporting it to dairies in Baltimore. The commission set February 6 as date for hearing on Beall's complaint.

Gas Fumes Kill Ex-Hotel Head

Mrs. Mary Barnett Found Dead in Delaware; Nurse Rescued.

Lewes, Del., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Mrs. Mary C. Barnett, 73, of Rehoboth Beach, Del., former operator of the Hotel Bellhaven, Rehoboth, and the Hotel Richardson, Dover, was found dead this morning in her cottage on Silver Lake from gas fumes believed caused by a defective furnace.

The accident was discovered by an orange peddler, who, failing to get a response to his ring, looked through a window and saw the woman lying on her bed. He notified Dr. Walter Robinson, of Rehoboth, who investigated and said she had been dead for several hours.

The house was filled with gas fumes and in another room the woman's nurse, Miss Edith Gibson, was also found unconscious and was taken to the Beebee Hospital, in Lewes, where she was resuscitated. A pet dog was almost overcome.

It is thought that the burning of green wood in the furnace had stopped the flue and caused the poisonous gases to escape.

The body was taken to the funeral home of Clayton Melson, Lewes, where a coroner's inquest will be held.

This Morning...

With Shirley Povich

UNTIL the wrestlers toss away their blueprints and begin to arrive at some free-hand decisions, this department will retain its tongue-in-cheek attitude toward the curious champions they set up, but I dare say the current system is the lesser of the two evils.

The other evil, of course, is honest wrestling. Honesty may be the best policy, as the copy books say, but the wrestling promoters' books take violent issue with the old maxim. On-the-level wrestlers are a drug on the wrestling market. On-the-level wrestling vies in dullness with college baseball and—the 56-pound weight throw, I was going to include, but maybe that's a bit harsh on the weight throw. It does succeed in keeping awake the badge-bedecked A. A. U. officials, four for every competitor.

At that, wrestling, as the most-maligned of all sports, must have a deeply ingrained popular appeal to exist, nay, even thrive under its persecution by the public prints and skeptical State athletic commissions. Just what that appeal may be, this department is unable to state, but perhaps even that most primitive urge of the wrestling fan is satisfied if one-tenth of 1 per cent of the ostensible agony that they see on the mat is indeed true.

In their little theater of war, the wrestlers have transformed the sport into a highly organized industry that dispenses entertainment instead of athletics. Gus Sonnenberg came along with a flying tackle that consisted of burying his noggin into the ample tummy of Ed Strangler Lewis a few years ago and the idea caught on. The game of hug, tug and maul went out and the grunts, grimaces and agony, garnished with body slams, airplane spins and kick-in-the-face holds, came in to stay.

TEN YEARS ago the wrestling promoter always knew where the next wrestler was coming from. Mons. Jacques Curley, of New York, had a corner on the wrestling market and was the only regular source of supply for the performing pachyderms. When a promoter needed a wrestler to round out his card, or an entire shipment of wrestlers, he simply contacted Mons. Curley in New York and his wrestlers were forthcoming.

Joe Turner was attempting to make the rent money with his matches at the Strand Theater after the burlesque shows not so many years ago and had succeeded in building up a young wrestler by the name of Young Ketonen to the point where the few hundred fans demanded his appearance every week. Turner exhausted the supply of well-known wrestling names available as opponents for Ketonen and communicated with Curley in New York.

"You've gotta get me a good man to wrestle Ketonen," Turner told Curley over the telephone. "Down here they wanta see what he can do against the big guys."

"I've got just the man," Curley told him. "Big Jack McCarthy, champion of Ireland, the rage of Dublin, a wow! I'll ship him down Thursday."

IN due time, Irish Jack McCarthy arrived. Turner himself had wrestled in the semifinal bout and returned to the dressing room to watch his main-bout performers dress.

"I took a look at this McCarthy, who was wearing a bright green bathrobe," Turner relates, "and it wasn't McCarthy at all. It was Joe Rocco, who wrestled on my card the week before."

"What's your name?" Turner asked Rocco.

"Jack McCarthy," came the reply.

"McCarthy, hell, you're Joe Rocco," Turner answered with some heat. "What does Curley mean sending you back here again this week? What did Curley tell you?"

"He told me to wrestle in Washington tonight and wear a green bathrobe."

It seems that Announcer Jimmy Lake finally saved the show for Turner. Addressing the audience, Lake announced: "Folks, we have a pleasant surprise for you this evening. Irish Jack McCarthy, who suffered two broken ribs when he was beaten by Alexis Romanoff in Philadelphia last night, has been unable to appear. We have in his stead, Alexis Romanoff, conqueror of McCarthy, to wrestle Young Ketonen tonight."

When, the following month, Rocco came back a third time as Petroff Pilsudski, the Polish Bear, Turner temporarily broke off relations with his New York wrestling commissioner.

Risko Loses Verdict to Dundee

Decision Is Changed as State Commission Orders Recount.

160-Pound Sensation Is Beaten by Former Middle Champ.

By Edward J. Neil.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—On a recount, after a hurried meeting of the New York State Athletic Commission right at the ringside, Vince Dundee, former middleweight champion, was awarded a ten-round decision tonight over Eddie (Babe) Risko, of Syracuse, N. Y., newest sensation among the 160-pounders.

For ten minutes after Risko first was given the decision on what was announced as a divided verdict of Referee Jed Gahan and Judges Jack Britton and Sidney Scharlin, the crowd of 8,221 howled so loudly in protest that the commission chairman, Gen. John J. Phelan, quickly gathered the ballots for a recount.

He found that Britton had given Dundee seven rounds and Risko three, and so had voted for Dundee. Scharlin had scored five rounds for Dundee, four for Risko and had called one even, but for some strange reason that he could not immediately explain, wrote his ticket for Risko.

That brought Gahan's ballot into the picture, and that read four for each and three even, but with Risko the choice on general principles.

So the commissioners, just as they did some time ago when the same sort of reasoning deprived Tony Canzoneri of a lightweight decision over Cleto Locatelli, tossed the whole proceedings out and started over again. Commissioner Bill Brown joined Phelan in authorizing a new deal, with Dundee the official winner.

Loder Is Victor.

Teddy Loder, New York welterweight, cuffed Joe Vignali, of Waterbury, Conn., around royally tonight to win an easy eight-round decision in the first preliminary.

Loder, a promising young boxer with a neat left hand and accurate right cross, consistently beat Vignali, a left hooker, to the punch, three times knocking his mouthpiece from between his teeth, though he could not floor him. A left hook cut Loder slightly near the right eye in the third. Loder weighed 142¼, Vignali, 138½.

Charley Bedami, 135, was awarded an unpopular decision over Al Casimini, 139½, both of New York, in the second eight-rounder.

Gamblers in the Garden lobby were offering odds of 3 to 1 on Dundee an hour before the main ten-round bout, despite the fact that Risko, latest middleweight sensation, recently knocked out Teddy Yarosz, division champion, in an overweight match. Yarosz beat Dundee twice, once for the title.

Cunningham Wins; Far Behind Record

Runs 3-4 Mile at Buffalo Meet in 3:03.4.

Buffalo, Jan. 25 (AP).—Glenn Cunningham had an easy time winning the three-quarter invitation mile feature of the national junior A. A. U. track meet tonight, but failed by 18 3-5 seconds to shatter the record of 3:03.4 made by Lloyd Hahn in 1925. Cunningham's time was 3:21.

Carl Roesch, Buffalo, flashed to the front in the last 50 meters of the 600-meter run to capture the race after Fred Kiger, University of Pittsburgh, had led from the start. Roesch's time was 1:24.4.

Two Tilts Tonight For Big Ten Teams

Northwestern, Ohio State in Conference Clash.

Chicago, Jan. 25 (AP).—The Big Ten closes a light week of basketball tomorrow night with two games, one of them a non-conference affair.

Northwestern and Ohio State, neither involved in the championship scramble, meet at Evanston in the only conference game. Chicago tackles Notre Dame's strong five at South Bend.

The Wildcats, the pre-season choice to argue over the title with Purdue, folded up at the start and face the Buckeyes with a record of one victory and four defeats. Ohio State has defeated Michigan and Chicago and lost to Iowa and Illinois. Notre Dame, while not quite as powerful as last year, will be favored over the Maroons.

Weaver First Regular To Sign Nat Contract

From the wilds of Hilton, N. C., the signed contract of Pitcher Monte Weaver was received at Griffith Stadium yesterday, bringing up to one the total of Washington regulars under contract for the 1935 season.

Coincidentally, the receipt of the signed contracts of Utility Infielder Johnny Kerr and Rookie Pitcher Ray Prim, was announced by Club Secretary Edward B. Eynon, jr. Prim has been recalled from Albany, to which he was released following his failure to earn a berth with the Nats last summer. Fifteen of the 31 players on the Washington roster are now under contract.

Furious Scrambles for Ball Mark Eastern Victory Over Tech

Hines Survives Tear Gas to Pace Field

Long Island Golfer Cards 142 in Coast Event; Loving Has 67.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 25 (AP).—Jimmy Hines, sharpshooter from Timber Point, Long Island, shaded par today to win medal honors of the San Francisco Match Play Open Golf tournament, but the real thrills were provided by soldiers.

Just as some of the stars were teeing off in the second round of the 36-hole qualifying matches, huge clouds of "tear gas" floated over a strip of woods separating the Presidio course from one of the "battle fields" of the military reservation.

It was all over almost as quickly as it took place. The wind shifted.

Equals First Round.

Hines was one of those routed by the gas, but he came back to cut a stroke off par with a score of 71, equaling his first-round effort.

Others carded better rounds during the day but Hines' consistency brought him the $125 that goes with low qualifying score. It is not a new experience for the 30-year-old player. He was medalist in the 1933 Metropolitan and National P. G. A. tournaments.

Walter Hagen failed to qualify. His two 77s and total 154 sent him to the sidelines. His playing partner, Richard Arlen, blew up and did not turn in a card.

Henry Picard Second.

Henry Picard, of Hershey, Pa., finished second to Hines with 71—72—143. Ben Loving, of Petersburg, Va., turned in the best score with a 67, 5 under par. Johnny Perelli, of Tahoe, Calif., was not far behind

High Glee Conquers Mate, Twenty Grand

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 25 (AP).—High Glee set a new Santa Anita track record for seven furlongs today to defeat the veterans Mate and Twenty Grand in 1:22 2-5. Mate ran second and Twenty Grand third in the four-horse race.

High Glee, 4-year-old brown filly of the C. V. Whitney stables, went out in front from the gate and never was headed. Her time over the fast track was 3-5 of a second better than the record here held by The Darb and was within 2-5 of a second of the 29-year-old world mark posted by Rose Ben.

The winner, victor in the Christmas stakes on the opening day here, paid $5.60 and $2.80 parimutuel tickets. No show bets were taken.

Mate came up fast to place, after trailing in fourth position with Twenty Grand second and Teralice third as they left the chute. The A. C. Bostwick 7-year-old made his bid on the turn but couldn't close the two lengths' gap between the winner and the field.

Twenty Grand, Kentucky Derby winner of 1931, stuck it out in second until the sprint home, when his old rival of four years ago pulled away.

High Glee came along two lengths in front with Mate a length and a half over the Greentree Stable starter. Teralice wilted under the withering finish and was well behind at the end.

Twenty Grand had gone to the post a 6-5 favorite. A crowd of approximately 18,000 persons attracted by the four-horse feature, which was the first prepping event for Mate and Twenty Grand, gave the veterans a fine ovation when they came on the track.

Twenty Grand, with Silvio Coucci in the saddle, promptly showed his appreciation by attempting to run away and was only stopped when he was overtaken by the lead pony.

Sonny Workman was up on the winner and his task was an easy one. It was Maurice Peters, youthful North Dakota jockey, who cleverly piloted Mate into second place.

O'Doul Asks Terry To Grant Release

Wants to Become Manager of San Francisco.

San Francisco, Jan. 24 (AP).—Frank (Lefty) O'Doul, who wants to be manager of the San Francisco Seals of the Pacific Coast Baseball League, tonight tried to persuade Manager Bill Terry, of the New York Giants, to grant him his unconditional release.

Speaking by long distance telephone to the New York manager, O'Doul pointed out that inasmuch as he was a "ten-year man" and that all clubs in the National League had waived on him, he felt he was entitled to his unconditional release.

Terry had previously expressed belief that if the San Francisco Club wanted O'Doul's service they should be willing to pay, say, $4,000, but tonight he reportedly said he would "think it over" and let O'Doul know.

Police Seeking Furr On Sister's Charge

Assault Warrant Is Out Against Washington Welter Champ.

FORLORN PHILLIP FURR, District welterweight boxing champion who is embroiled in an argument with his duly accredited manager, yesterday heard more woe added to his already brimming cup of sorrow when his sister, Mrs. Mattie Pullman, of 2132 I street northwest, swore out a warrant against him charging assault.

Acting in his capacity of superintendent of police and a member of the District Boxing Commission, Maj. Ernest Brown ordered Fourth Precinct police to serve the warrant immediately and to hold Furr under heavy bond. At a late hour last night, Furr had not been apprehended.

The attack, Mrs. Pullman says, occurred Thursday night. She charges Furr struck her several times. The boxer resides at 465 H street southwest.

Faces Suit by Manager.

As Mrs. Pullman was making her complaint to an assistant district attorney, who issued the warrant, more trouble was brewing for Furr in his alteraction with Dr. Charles Goettling, his manager.

Goettling was understood to be preparing, through his attorney, Martin McNamara, to sue the boxer for a purse of $258, now being held by Promoter Joe Turner. Goettling's contract as Furr's manager calls for the payment of all purses to him and specifies that he in turn shall pay Furr 66 2-3 per cent of such purses after training expenses have been deducted.

Furr has agreed to allow Goettling to be given 33 1-3 per cent of the purse invloved, which was earned in his recent fight at the auditorium against Johnny Jadick. Goettling has insisted that he be paid the entire amount, claiming the boxer owes him a sum in the neighborhood of $900. The boxing commission has declared a "hands off" policy, advising all concerned that the matter can be settled only by civil action or arbitration.

PHIL FURR.

Furr Also Plans Suit.

Through his own attorney, James Hughes, Furr yesterday also announced he would enter suit for the purse. A meeting to arbitrate the dispute, scheduled yesterday, failed to materialize when Goettling, who had not been certain he would be able to appear because of heavy snows surrounding his home, did not attend.

Pat Crawford Ill, Is Named Manager

News of Rochester Choice Is Kept From Him.

Kinston, N. C., Jan. 25 (AP).—Clifford Rankin (Pat) Crawford, St. Louis Cardinals' reserve infielder who was named manager of the Rochester Redwings today, has been ill in Memorial General Hospital here for several days and his physician, Dr. Paul Whitaker, said late today that his condition had grown very serious.

Crawford underwent a hemorrhoid operation several weeks ago and septicaemia developed, but his condition did not become serious until within the last few days. Dr. Whitaker said the infection in the blood stream apparently had localized in the liver.

His appointment as manager of Rochester was not discussed with Crawford by members of his family.

Crawford, 32 years old, is a native of Society Hill, S. C., and was a basket ball and baseball star at Davidson College before going into professional baseball in 1923 with the Charlotte Club of the old South Atlantic League.

During his baseball career he has seen service with Greenville, S. C., Atlanta, Chattanooga, Louisville, Toledo, Hollywood, Columbus and the New York, Cincinnati and St. Louis National League clubs.

Woodstock Swim Meet Is Postponed by Snow

Woodstock, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Due to the heaviest snowstorm in recent years, the Massanutten Academy swimming team was forced to cancel its meet scheduled with Western High School here tonight. According to Coach L. E. Fouts, local mentor, the meet will be held at a later date.

The Far Rockaway High School of New York will meet the Cadets here Tuesday night.

Moody, Trainer, Dies.

Louisville, Ky., Jan. 25 (AP).—James H. (Uncle Jim) Moody, veteran trainer of thoroughbreds, died at his home here early today of a heart attack. He was 59 years old, and suffered a stroke last summer at Dade Park, Ky.

Richmond Preps Win.

Richmond, Jan. 25 (AP).—The crack John Marshall High School basket ball team downed Newport News, 30 to 22, here tonight. It was the Justices' fifth consecutive win of the season.

North Carolina Boxers Meet Virginia

Conceded Best Chance of Cavaliers' Rivals to Score Victory.

By Bill McCormick
(Post Staff Writer).

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—University of Virginia boxers, undefeated since 1931, will invade these precincts tomorrow to stick out their chins to the North Carolina mittmen, who are conceded the best chance of any team on the Cavaliers' dual meet schedule of rudely terminating the winning streak.

Coach Johnny LaRowe has not announced the men who will oppose the Tarheels, but since his varsity escaped practically unscathed in its meet last week with V. M. I., it is almost a certainty that he will start the four letter men and four newcomers who won from Harvard, 6 to 2, and V. M. I., 7 to 1.

The Carolinians will have five sophomores in their line-up—five of the most likely looking sophomore sockers in the conference today. While the Tarheels' record as a whole is not as impressive as that of Virginia, they can boast of an undefeated record this season in which V. P. I. was defeated, 7 to 1, and South Carolina was turned back, 6½ to 1½.

Diehl Faces Hahn.

Diehl, Carolina's 115-pounder, will be one of the three Tarheels who will be called upon to face a conference champion. It generally is believed the flyweight who beats Archie Hahn in a dual meet will be the flyweight who will win the Southern Conference title this year.

Eustler, Carolina's 125-pounder, also will be facing a champion in Gordon Rainey. Rainey, like Hahn, is undefeated this season and is a likely candidate to repeat in the conference tournament.

Edwards or Dixon, of North Carolina, will draw the lightweight assignment against Marion Brooks. Brooks, a newcomer to the Virginia line-up, has shown steady improvement in every fight this season, but does not yet rank with the best in the division.

The Fisher-Womer bout in the 145-pound class looms as a potential show stealer. Womer, Virginia's conference champion, is undefeated this season and improved

Eastern, 25; Tech, 22.

By John R. Vosburgh.

LANKY, raw-boned Lavelle Dean, Eastern High's dead-eye basket ball captain, kept his blue-clad cohorts from Lincoln Park out in front in the interhigh race yesterday, leading them to a hair-raising 25-to-22 triumph over their highest-rated rival in the series, the surging Maroon five from Tech.

But while the Eastern titleholders were pulling out their fourth straight win of the series before a deafening throng at Roosevelt, Western's dark-horse combination was coming through with another sensational victory at Tech, winning an extra-period decision from Central, 19-17, to keep dogging Eastern's heels persistently from second place.

A capacity crowd jammed the gymnasium to watch Tech make its bid for the series lead. The Maroon answered everything the Lincoln Parkers had to offer except the devastating eye of the dynamic Dean. Even Tech's captain, Reds Daly, a brilliant star in his own right, was unable to match the almost magical talent which Dean has for finding the basket.

Abandons Zone Defense.

Coach Artie Boyd, of Tech, abandoned his customary zone defense to combine it with a man-to-man system in a desperate but vain effort to stop the Eastern pilot. He assigned the duty of covering Dean to Andy Farrell, speedy little guard, and the fast-traveling youngster answered with a game performance. But when he kept Dean away from the basket the stringy Easterner would swish 'em through from afar and in the later stages he broke away entirely to run up his scoring for the day to 13 points, including six goals from the floor.

Tech spotted the Lincoln Parkers to a 5-point lead in the first half and then tried to come back and wipe it out. But it was too great a task. The Maroon played Eastern more than even in the last two periods only to find the half-time deficit too much to overcome.

Take 17-16 Lead.

The Techmen hit back bravely in the third period, storming through the Blue team time and again to take a 17-16 lead going into the final quarter. With less than three minutes to play, the teams were dead-locked at 22-22, but Chick Hollidge, Eastern forward, sank his third foul shot of the half to give the defending champions the lead. In the final minute, Dean gave the triumph an added ironic touch by cutting loose and scoring on a fast play under the basket while Tech looked on almost bewilderedly.

Dean's three baskets in the first half provided the momentum for Eastern's sweeping lead by the time the intermission came. Daly's two goals kept Tech somewhere within striking distance, with John Billings and Jimmy Roland contributing the other markers.

Take 14-13 Lead.

Billings, Mullitz and Farrell started off the second half with baskets one after another for a 14-13 lead and Tech held the one-point margin until Hollidge tied it at 17-17 early in the last period. Dean scored on a mile-a-minute bounce pass play from Edelin and

Tigers and Cardinals Ruth's 1935 Choices

By Stuart Cameron.

NEW YORK, Jan. 25 (U.P.).—The 1935 world series will be a return performance of last year's classic if preseason guesses of Babe Ruth are correct. This information reached the writer today in a letter from a friend who lives in Paris.

"I had a long chat with your pal, the Babe, on Thursday," the letter began. "I happened to see him at the Cafe de la Paix and we sat down and sipped a couple of coin-treaus. I decided to ask him some of the questions you would have asked, and here's the general idea of what he had to say:

"The Babe is 'positive' that the Cards will repeat in the National. I asked him why, in particular, and he said, 'Well, St. Louis still has the Dean brothers and they surely have another great season.'

Sees Simmons With Tigers.

"I started to ask him what he thought about the American League race, but he beat me to it. I nearly fell out of my chair when he named the Tigers as probable winners. The Babe said he based this prediction on the assumption that Mickey Cochrane will induce the Chicago White Sox to part with Al Simmons. He seems to have an inside track about such a deal and, for all I know here, it may have been made." (It has not.—Editor's note.)

The letter went on to quote Babe's views on attendance. They are going up this season, Ruth believes. He blames losses in patronage during recent years to the general business slump and insists that the decreases were by no means indicative of a lessening of fan interest.

All-Time Yankee Team.

"I know it was a trick question," the letter continued, "but the Babe was in a merry mood after his long trip from the Orient, so I asked him to name his all-time all-star Yankee team. Here it is:

"Lou Gehrig, first; Aaron Ward, second; Roger Peckinpaugh, short; Joe Dugan, third; Bill Dickey, catch; Bob Meusel, Earl Combs and Ruth, himself, in the outfield; Vernon Gomez, Red Ruffing, Herb Pennock as pitchers. He named the late Miller Huggins as the Yankees' all-time best manager. That ought to make a great hit with Joe McCarthy (present manager of the Yankees).

"'Huggins,' Ruth said, 'wasn't ranked with McGraw and Connie Mack, but he was plenty well liked by us players. We really liked working for him and you must admit he did get results.'"

Nebraska Pamphlet Is Aid to Court Fans

Lincoln, Nebr. (AP).—Basket ball has been made easy for spectators at University of Nebraska games this year because of an illustrated pamphlet in which rules of the game are explained in simple style.

The pamphlet explains infractions of the rules, illustrating each by a diagram.

Fight Psychology Effective Again; Wins Grid Contest

BERKELEY, Calif., (AP).—Rufe Klawans, Pacific Coast conference football referee, is being blamed for a story supposedly exemplifying "Stub" Allison's unusual but effective sense of fight psychology.

Just before the start of the California-St. Mary's game of 1931, when California's new head coach was assistant coach in charge of the line, Klawans says, Allison assembled his charges and handed each a ticket to the game.

"What good are these now?" asked one of the players. "It's too late to give them away."

"The tickets are for you boys," replied Allison. "From what I've heard the Gael linemen are going to push you out of the stadium and you'll need the tickets to get back in so you can see the finish of the game."

The Bears won.

Tie for Cue Lead.

Philadelphia, Jan. 25 (AP).—Herbert Courtney, left-handed cue wielder from New York, went into a tie for first place in the national amateur pocket billiards championship today by defeating Lewis Mathews, of Chicago, 125 to 90, for his fourth straight victory.

Cardinal Office Still Awaiting Dizzy Dean's Signed Contract

By Jimmy Powers.

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—Dizzy Dean's contract has not yet appeared in the Cardinal office and Br'er Paul is still sulking . . . Story behind National League's recent bad publicity is that the U. S. will no longer support 16 major franchises . . . We hate to see even magnates lose money except that most of them are chuckleheads posing as big-hearted "sportsmen" patrons . . . Mungo phoned long-distance that his pal, Buck Newsom, will be a positive wiz this summer . . . Mungo also said his daddy gave him a farm teeming with bobwhite, possum and quail . . . Lawson Little, champion golfer, was overlooked for Sullivan award because of nasty crack he made when conceding himself putt at Brookline.

Billy McCarney's handwriting, according to the C. T. P. S. chirographer, showed more character than specimens from fellow fight managers . . . Billy modestly said the field was small, and for a minute we blew the gag . . . Copy desk yelled: "Boy, get synonyms for hockey puck!" And, believe it or not, Webster listed "hobgoblin, sprite and European goat milker" . . . Now let posterity puzzle over this journalistic masterpiece: "Johnson poke-checked, escaped a ganging against the dasher, and then the Chinaman fired point-blank to beat the goalie's shin pads. He sank the European goat milker into the fish cords to put the Rangers 1 up on the Star-Spangled sextet."

Santa Anita opened with five buglers and now uses one after closing pari-mutuel window labeled for $1,000 bets . . . Athletic marvel of the age is Viktor Barna, Hungarian table tennis star, who out-Tildens Tilden with 23 cups from 23 nations . . . Wait till reporters get to work on Walt (Fatso) Brown, new Yank pitcher, who Kate Smiths at 262 . . . Eric Ny, Swede champ at 800 and 1,500 meters, is returning to Wanamaker meet merely to redeem himself for '34 flopperoo . . . Winter's worst gag, "What did Bill Bonthron say to Gleen Cunningham?" Answer: "So long, kid, see you next Venzke."

Dodgers bought Hack Wilson three years ago today and did they get a gypping from Simon (Leres) Breadon! . . . Louie Fugazy 112-pound amateur boxing champ, is nephew of Promoter Humbert Fugazy, who made winter circus bid to Babe Ruth for Zach Miller . . . Hug Again, Paying $34.40, Wins at Hialeah by Stretch Rush

16-to-1 Shot Overhauls Leaders.

Mettle Pays $101.20 to Place in Blanket Finish of Third.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Writer.)

HIALEAH RACE TRACK, Fla., Jan. 25.—Hug Again, remembered by most Washington turf fans for his races with Dreel at Laurel, defeated Miney Myerson here today in the feature race. In fact, Miney Myerson, which once raced for peanuts at Charles Town and later set the track record of 1:10 1-5 for the six-furlong course here, was forced into third money by Gentle Knight.

The money piled in on Miney Myerson until it was rumored that the Seminole Indians came over from the Everglades to wager their shells. Hope To Do also drew heavy betting, with the result that Hug Again was a $34.40 proposition.

Winner Off Last.

Hug Again, the property of J. U. Gratton, gave no indication of being a serious contender during the first quarter. Little Georgie Watson was riding a snug last while Miney Myerson and Gentle Knight were burning oil out in front. Hope To Do was close to the pace.

At the far turn, Watson made his move on Hug Again and in the drive to the wire he found racing room between Gentle Knight and Miney Myerson. Georgie drove through and Hug Again was a half length ahead at pay-off time.

Florida weather was sneaking back to the figure on the Chamber of Commerce circulars after the cold wave which saw the temperature at 50 degrees last night. The usual 15,000 were present.

Dr. Freeland, the winner of a Preakness, was dropped in with cheap horses in the day's opening sprint and carried 120 pounds to an easy victory. Free, which held up the start and broke from the outside, was second ahead of Predict. The Doctor paid $3.70.

Mrs. Dempsey's Filly Wins.

The colors of Mrs. Jack Dempsey were first to the wire in the hop, skip and jumb for juveniles. They were carried by Step Miss, a little filly which packed a stretch punch to defeat Black Mistress and Maxine F. She rewarded with an $8.20 pay off. The time of :34 1-5 was the fastest of the meeting.

Master Lad came flying through the stretch to take the third race and cheer his backers with a $26 mutuel. However, the real thrill came when Mettle, second in a blanket finish, paid $101.20 to place. Winged Flight was third. The veteran L. Schaefer rode a splendid race.

Quel Jeu brought the favorite players back into the picture in the fifth race when he drove to a victory over Sunador and Abner to pay $4, however, Jockey M. Winters was forced to ride out the veteran choice.

Ahmed, at $5.90, won the sixth race, under strong stretch handling by Jockey J. Stout. Big Red and Brass Monkey trailed the Moran color-bearer in the six-horse field.

N. E. Stanton, the Washingtonian, accounted for the day's finale with Wise Advocate, an old Maryland favorite, at $19.80.

Dear Al: Hialeah Race Track, Fla., Jan. 25.

These red flamingos which make their home in the center-field lake here give me a kick. They haven't moved in the afternoon since the meeting started. The flock of more than 100 stand in the water almost motionless. But don't think for a moment that they are dumb. They don't gather down by the 50-cent stand or even in front of those $1.25 grand stand seats. No, sir, not these flamingos they park as near to the $4 clubhouse as they can get. We were held to one winner today, but we had plenty of company. The boys who cover the best tracks in America were mad enough to wreck the worst press box in America before the Florida sun finished the day's work. I believe Clocker Mike and Trainer Joe are afraid of each other. I didn't hear that proposed foot race mentioned once today. It is with a feeling of confidence that I pass these along.

BILL.

First race—Previous winners of juvenile races clash in the day's opener, and Wha Hae appears to be the best of the group. Hi-Nelli and James City have displayed their speed and will be hard to keep out of the money bracket. Broadway Bill has worked well, but needs racing education.

Second race—Last Time gets in this sprint with only 102 pounds and Lynch to do the riding. This combination is given a shade over Seawick and Jim John.

Third race—West Main is fit and ready for a test of this kind and gets in with only a steadying 112 pounds. Providing Horn gives us a real ride, I believe we will cash. Merrily On has some class and is a dangerous contender. Taunton, a good finisher, may go well at 7 furlongs.

Fourth race—Golden Vein meets a field here that may suit his brand of speed. Sammy Renick has the mount. Jesting is in with only 102 pounds and must be respected. Jirasol II ran a good race last out to be second and is an upset possibility.

Fifth race—Roman Soldier is the probable favorite in the Hialeah Stakes and is the logical choice both on works and races. Wise Prince is the one to beat despite that 120-pound assignment. Foxy Agnes moves up into better company, but may improve enough to be dangerous.

Sixth race—Meade made several moves with Bold Lover here the other day and then was blocked in the stretch run. I expect the Bradleyite to upset Slapdash and Late Date. I believe this is the spot of spots.

Seventh race—Foxland Hall likes the turf course and should take care of this field. Stall Man will have to be dealt with if he gets off the also eligible list. Octaroro for the show. Mayvite is one out of Clocker Mike's book.

Best bet—Bold Lover.

MY PURCHASE got away fast, raced MOUNTAIN ELK into defeat, and held on well. HIGHEST POINT ran a great race. He trailed far back in early part, was forced to go wide around turn, and was running very fast at finish. GOLDEN WAY, well up in early part, just about needed this race to put him on edge for a winning effort. RED ROAMER ran good race. TRAHISON closed a big gap on inside.

Star Trackmen Vie Tonight In Boston

Cunningham and Venzke to Hold Spotlight as Season Opens.

BOSTON, Jan. 25 (U.P.).—With Glenn Cunningham, of Kansas, and Gene Venzke, of Pennsylvania, staging another of those guaranteed 1-mile thrillers the fourteenth annual Prout Memorial Games will ring up the curtain on Boston's indoor track season at the Garden tomorrow night.

Venzke has won the Curley mile event three years running, but it should be a different story this year with Cunningham in the field. The Boston track has not been conducive to the setting of national or world records, but it appeared likely that Cunningham might at least lower the track record of 4:15.2, established by Venzke in 1932.

Should Liven Race.

Bill Ray, of Manhattan, Glen Dawson, of Oklahoma, and Brendan Moynahan, of Boston, the remainder of the mile field, will be fighting it out for fifth starting place in the famed Millrose mile at New York next week, which should liven the race. Cunningham, Venzke, Bill Bonthron and Sweden's Eric Ny are the certified starters in the Millrose mile.

Other favorites for tomorrow night's feature events were Chuck Hornboestel in the 1000-yard run; Ivan Fuqua in the 600; and Donald Lash over the veteran Joe McCluskey, of New York, in the two-mile.

Hornboestel, Fuqua and Lash all wear the colors of Indiana.

Coach Joe Gardner inserted substitutes liberally after the Little Hoyas had taken a 24-7 lead in the first half. Lloyd Rice, the Prep's high-scoring center, shared the point honors with Busbey of Friends, with 13 points apiece.

Field of 25 Bowlers Looms for Campbell Stakes' Start Tonight

Santini Seen As Favorite In Classic

Simon to Defend Title; Georgetown Alleys Scene of Start.

WASHINGTON'S premier duckpin classic, the ninth annual Howard Campbell sweepstakes, which lures the city's foremost maple shooters into head-to-head competition, gets under way tonight at 8 p. m., at the Georgetown Recreation Alleys.

Although a comparatively large entry list is not in prospect, it is expected that the prize and prestige which the event carries will draw enough entries at starting time to boost to 25 bowlers.

The event will be staged over a period of three successve Saturdays, the second five-game block to be rolled at the Lucky Strike Alleys and the final block, which will produce the winner, will be rolled in the spacious Convention Hall emporium.

Simon Defends Title.

Sam Simon, who established a record pinfall of 1,973 for the sweepstakers last season when he overtook Wayne "Hokie" Smith, King Pin flash, to win, will be the defending champion, and is a sure starter. Howard Campbell, namesake of the event, who has rolled in all the previous games and who was just nosed out in 1928 by Reds Megaw, is also a sure starter.

Others who are likely to roll are Astor Clarke, Joe Harrison, Ed Blakeney, Tony Santini, Paulie Harrison, Johnny Anderson, Ollie Pacini, Hokie Smith, Whip Litchfield, Reds Megaw, Perce Wolfe, Dutch Newman, Bill Krauss, Brad Mandley, Joe Freschi, Frank Mischou, George Honey, Irving Billheimer, Lee Rothgeb and Eddie Espey.

Of the entries who have been clicking the maples in grand style this season, Tony Santini, Washington Singles League leader, figures to be the one to beat. Pressing Santini for honors will be Joe Harrison, Whip Litchfield, Astor Clarke, Bill Krauss, Eddie Espey and Sam Simon. The winner's reward will be a diamond medal besides a cash prize comprised of the individual $28 entrance fees.

Winners in previous years are:

G. Wolstenholm	1927	1,844
W. Megaw	1928	1,828
B. Mandley	1929	1,805
M. Rosenberg	1930	1,834

Hoya Five Host To Carnegie Tonight

Capt. Hargaden to Return to Line-up; Visitors Are Favorites.

DAVID, personified by a doughty band of Georgetown dribblers, goes stone-slinging after another Goliath at 8 o'clock tonight at Tech High School, where the Hoyas and Carnegie Tech meet head-on in an Eastern Intercollegiate Conference game.

Capt. Ed Hargaden will be in the line-up as Georgetown battles with the powerful Plaid for undisputed possession of third place, and, although the Hilltoppers are portraying the role of under-dog, Hargaden's presence gives them the well known fighting chance. He suffered a slightly sprained ankle earlier in the wek and almost was forced to withdraw.

Carnegie stopped the Blue and Gray earlier in the season at Pittsburgh by the comfortable margin of 43 to 31. But even on a strange court, before a hostile throng of spectators, the visitors do not figure to slip as much as 12 points.

Defeated Twice.

Tech will present a rangy and veteran quintet whose only defeats were at the hands of Pitt and Temple. Temple climbed into first place in the conference at the Plaid's expense only to drop back to third later when Red Rosan, high-scoring guard, was injured.

In Ted Riggs Carnegie has an all-conference guard and an extremely dangerous scorer when turned loose on the court. His running mate, Morry Patt, was a quarter back with the football team last autumn. Joe Macalka and Simon Felser will start at forwards.

Coach Fred Mesmer intends to rely on the same five men who have started in the last four games for Georgetown. Don Gibeau will pair off with Hargaden at forward; Parcells, center; Ben Zola and Joe Corless, guards.

Olmsted Trips D. & H.

Olmsted Grillman defeated Delaware and Hudson last night, 44-27. Tonight the winners play Rockville on the latter's court at 8:15 o'clock. Olmsted players will meet at 7:15 at Georgia avenue and Upshur street.

even over last year. His punching is sharper and he still retains the speed and accuracy that made him ruler of the welterweight roost in 1934.

Fisher Undefeated.

Fisher is a cool, calculating type of fighter who will form a perfect foil for Womer's whirlwind methods. It is said that during his entire freshman year, when he was undefeated, he was struck by only two hard blows. Fisher also is undefeated on the varsity this season.

Medynski, Carolina's 155-pound puncher, will meet the only southpaw on the Cavaliers' squad when he faces Bill McClung.

Capt. Giddins, Tarheel middleweight, is one of the trio of veterans in the Carolina line-up. He will draw the rapidly improving Caplan, who is undefeated as a member of the Virginia varsity.

Storm clouds loom for Noll, Virginia's light-heavyweight, who, despite promise before the season began, has been defeated in both his fights so far. His opponent will be Novich, a 175-pounder whom many are picking to beat McCaw, of Maryland, for the conference title.

Cramer, Virginia's whirlwind heavyweight, will oppose Carruth in the unlimited division.

C. U. Five Beats Gallaudet by 45-19 Score

Cards Run Up Total in Second Half After Leading, 13-10.

IN THE slow, sleepy fashion of a guy getting out of bed to extinguish the lights, Catholic University squelched Gallaudet's ambitious courtment last night at Brookland, 45-19.

A throng of 500 fans saw the Blue collapse like a punctured balloon in the second half after holding the Cards to a 13-10 score in the opening stanza. Gallaudet waged a game but futile battle to stem the tide of baskets that completely inundadated the Kendall Greeners.

The Redbirds jumped into a 4-0 lead at the outset and threatened to run away with the ball game, but it was a horse of another color when Ellorhorst and Burnett went to work for Gallaudet. As noted above, C. U. was clinging grimly to a 13-10 advantage at the intermission.

But Bernie Lieb and his mates went to work with a will in the second half and it literally rained points for Catholic. Gallaudet was Schmarr following the boys like the held well in check with Hermie house detective and breaking up most of their shorts.

Eight Reasons Why C. U. Reigns Favorite Over Temple

Temple Tests C. U. Boxers Tonight

Rubenstein Was Beaten Only Once Last Year; Meets Restaino.

AT RAZOR-EDGE sharpness after a week of intensive training and in a belligerent mood, Catholic University's hook and jab artists climb through the ropes tonight at Brookland to meet Temple's boxing brigade in the lone bit of collegiate athletic endeavor scheduled locally tonight. The opening bell rings at 8:15 o'clock.

Temple reputedly has the strongest aggregation of collegiate clouters Catholic has faced thus far, but the Owls have yet to be tested under fire. This will be their first match of the season, while it is the fourth for C. U. But as an added incentive Temple is fighting for its first decision over Catholic, which won four previous matches.

Cardinals Favored.

With a touch of pardonable pride, Coach Eddie LaFond last night announced his line-up for C. U. of Miro, 115 pounds; Restaino, 125; Capt. Thibideau, 135; Fred Mix, 145; Tom Oliver, 155; Dranginis or Max Brinkman, 165; Red Fleming, 175, and Danny Pyne, heavyweight.

As a whole this group figures to thrash Temple soundly and without much ado, but matches are won in the ring, not in newspapers. V. P. I. took a lot of overconfidence out of C. U. last week in gaining a 4-4 tie, and the Cards have worked hard this week to prevent a repetition tonight.

Rubenstein Foes' Star.

Lou Rubenstein, a clever little southpaw, is Temple's outstanding boxer. He'll meet Restaino tonight. Fighting in the 115-pound class last season, Rubenstein dropped only one decision, and that to Puglio, of West Virginia, who won the Eastern Conference championship.

Temple also has two prospective winners in Eddie Kavjian, 145-pounder, who is a veteran of two years with enough experience and ability to stand up with the best of them, and Bill Davidson. The latter is a reformed football player who has done well since putting on the gloves.

Named Rhodes Scholar.

Bethlehem, Pa., Jan. 22 (Spl.).—Middle Atlantic States Collegiate Association high jump champion for all three years of his competition as a member of the Lehigh University track team, which he captained in 1934, Milton Meissner has just attained a far more significant "championship" of this same district in the form of a Rhodes scholarship to Oxford University, England.

Max Baer Promoter Promises 'Big News'

MIAMI, Jan. 25 (AP).—Mike Jacobs, New York boxing promoter, who saw his plans vanish into thin air when Art Lasky, Minnesota heavyweight contender, yesterday refused a chance to box Champion Max Baer, today came back with a promise of "an important announcement" before dawn. He would say no more.

Jacobs arranged next Monday night's program at the Miami Stadium in which Lightweight Champion Barney Ross, of Chicago, will defend his synthetic junior welterweight title against Frankie Klick, of San Francisco.

He also brought Baer here for a supporting exhibition against Old-Timer Jimmy Maloney and since has been busy trying to arrange an honest-to-goodness fight for the champion under Southern skies.

Back at labor after postponement of the fight from Thursday night, Ross and Klick each boxed three rounds with sparring partners.

So did Tony Shucco, who had arrived late and confident from Boston to meet Joe Knight, the Cairo (Ga.) Cracker, in the ten-round semifinal at the light heavyweight. Tony, who had previously won a decision over Knight, lost the confident air when Jacobs announced Knight would be given a chance at Bob Olin, holder of the 175-pound title, if he licked Shucco.

Max Baer agreed yesterday to meet Lasky, who has been yelling for a match, over ten rounds to no decision in Miami on February 22. Jacobs phoned Maurice Lasky, Art's brother and manager, who rejected the offer, declaring he wanted 20 rounds to a decision or nothing.

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—Madison Square Garden today announced the signing of Art Lasky, Minneapolis contender for the heavyweight championship, and Jimmy Braddock, of Jersey City, for a 15-round bout February 1.

Braddock's recent victory over John Henry Lewis, Arizona Negro, has brought him back in the heavyweight picture.

In two eight-round preliminaries Abe Feldman, local heavyweight, will meet Roy Lazer, of Paterson, N. J., and Steve Dudas, Edgewater, N. J., will box Tom Patrick, of California.

Navy's Ring, Mat Teams Open Year

Boxers Oppose West. Md.; Wrestlers Face Penn.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Navy's winter indoor sports program begins to hit into its real stride tomorrow, with the varsity wrestlers and boxers engaging in their inaugural contests.

"Spike" Webb's leather pushers will square off against Western Maryland College in the feature event at night, while the grapplers, coached by John Schutz, will go to the mat with University of Pennsylvania at 4 p. m. Two other events will be basket ball between the Plebes and Eastern High School, of Washington, preceding the wrestling bouts, and a small-bore rifle contest with Cornell.

Varsity basket ball has been holding the spotlight since early in January, but the Middy loopers will make their only trip away from base for their annual battle with Pennsylvania in the Palestra, at Philadelphia. Pennsylvania and Navy have been coming along at a merry clip and a lively contest is anticipated.

Indications tonight were that the Navy-Western Maryland ring meet will be shorn of some of the anticipated interest, as two of the Green Terror stars will not put on gloves. Bernie Kaplan, intercollegiate champion in the light heavyweight division is ineligible under the freshman rule, while word comes from Westminster that Pontecarve, heavyweight, is deficient in his studies. However, the Terrors expect to bring a strong combination, with such men as Capt. Gorski. Intercollegiate 165-pound champion, Kaddy, entered as light heavyweight to oppose George Lambert, Navy captain; Bennett, bantam; Rusteberg, feather; Buddy Myers, light; Keyser, junior middleweight, all veterans, and Haynes, welterweight. Navy's other entries are Degolian, bantam; Barry, feather; Blitch, light; Conkey, welter; Michael, junior middle; Zabris-Kie, senior middle.

Two Mid-Westerners Share Target Honors

Pinehurst, N. C., Jan. 24 (AP).—A couple of Midwesterners—Joe Hiestand, of Hillsboro, Ohio, and H. C. Jones, of East Alton, Ill.—divided honors in the midwinter target tournament here today.

Hiestand won the Carolina hundred after a shoot-off with Jones, and the Illinois marksman came back to take the preliminary handicap by one shot from Hiestand. Hiestand won both events last year.

Eastern, Western Win Court Battles

then gave Eastern a 21-19 lead with a long shot which hardly touched the rim after Daly had scored for Tech. Dean made good on a free shot and Mullitz did likewise for Tech. Mullitz, Farrell and Daly scored foul shots for Tech for 22-22, but Hollidge and Dean settled the issue in the closing minutes.

Western took a 12-4 lead over Central in the first half and then was held to 1 point in the second half by the rallying Mount Pleasanters. Capt. Charlie Nau was the only Central player scoring in the first two periods, but Bill Munhall and Al Katz dominated the scoring in the second half. Katz started the fireworks with a foul and ended it up in the closing seconds at 13-13, a foul by Dodderidge being Western's sole point in the two periods.

Bill Page, bespectacled Western guard, looped a long shot, and Bill Brennan followed to stack the Red team to a 17-13 lead in the extra session, but Nau came through with two baskets and it was 17-all. In the last minute of play, Phil Maloney, Western guard, sank a pot shot from the foul zone for the winning margin.

Virginia Teams Facing Busy Week-End

Boxers Vie in Chapel Hill; Swimming, Cage Tilts on Home Card.

UNIVERSITY, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Tomorrow is a full sports day for the University of Virginia. Not only will six Cavalier teams be in action, four at home and two away, but there is an added afternoon attraction in the annual basket ball game between Episcopal High School and Augusta Military Academy.

Virginia's boxers, with 20 successful meets behind them since their last defeat, run a severe risk of having this victory string snapped when they face North Carolina in Chapel Hill tomorrow night. Freshman bouts, beginning at 7:30 o'clock, precede the varsity contest.

The home sports program gets under way at 3:30 p. m. with a double-header swimming meet. While the varsity tank team is opposing Randolph-Macon College the freshmen will be trying their skill against Augusta Military Academy.

Basket Ball Game.

The E. H. S.-A. M. A. court contest, which has been played here for many years, is also scheduled to start at 3:30 o'clock.

Virginia's first year basketeers have an afternoon game against Naval Training Station from Norfolk. This affair is scheduled to start at 5 o'clock at the end of the Episcopal-Augusta game.

Hampden-Sydney College comes to meet the varsity basket ball team at 8 p. m. This will be the first home appearance of the Cavalier regulars in more than two weeks during which they have played five games against Southern Conference rivals.

These varsity basketeers started out with three defeats at the hands of Washington and Lee, Duke and North Carolina, but hit their stride to win from V. M. I. and V. P. I. in their last two contests.

Kendall School Tops Gonzaga High, 29 to 18

Kendall School added another victory to its string last night, winning an unexpectedly easy victory over Gonzaga High on the Gonzaga court, 29 to 18.

The winners took a lead of 14-8 in the first half and went on to stretch it in the last two periods, with Ramsay, forward, leading the scoring drive. Gonzaga was never within striking distance after the first period.

Champion Baer, Cool in Ring, Gets Jitters on Golf Course

MIAMI, Jan. 25 (AP).—As a golfer champion Max Baer, in the opinion of Sue Rown, 17-year-old Miami miss, may be a good prize fighter.

"He's too muscle bound, or whatever you call it," said Miss Rown, who carried the champion's clubs on a tour of the fairways and traps.

"And another thing, he gets the jitters playing in front of spectators—imagine that, after all the people he has fought before."

Miss Rown, a dimunitive blonde, explained:

"He was getting along pretty well back on the course, but when we got to the tenth tee he went haywire. A small gallery was looking on and the champion banged his drive into a tree.

"But just the same I think he likes having them around. After scooping that drive into the palm, he dropped another ball and sent it away like a bullet. It was a powerful shot. He turned to the gallery, looking kinda pleased and said:

"'How'd you like that, boys?'"

Baer is not so good on the greens, she revealed.

"If it took power alone," Miss Rown summed it up, "Max would be a great golfer—providing he connected as often and as squarely as he does in the ring."

Then she confided:

"Personally, I believe all those muscles of his get in his way while playing."

Nazis to Bid For Baer Battle

To Dangle Offer of Half Million to Meet Max Schmeling.

NEW YORK, Jan. 25 (U.P.).—Champion Max Baer will be offered $500,000 to defend his heavyweight title against former champ Max Schmeling in boxing-crazed Germany this summer, if the Black Uhlan of the Rhine defeats Steve Hamas in March.

Promoter Walter Rothenberg, who was behind the Schmeling-Walter Neusel bout which drew 105,000 spectators and who is staging the Schmeling-Hamas show, has the backing of influential Germans and the Nazi government.

A championship fight would come under the head of propaganda, which includes creation of the greatest set-up for the Olympic games, to be held in Germany in 1936, ever visualized.

Germany Fans Stirred.

Fred Kirsch, German newspaperman, who was instrumental in Schmeling's American campaign which led to his winning the world heavyweight title, today revealed the boxing frenzy which is sweeping Germany and told of plans already made for staging a heavyweight championship.

Kirsch revealed that tickets already have gone on sale for Rothenberg's Hamas-Schmeling bout, which will be a sellout weeks in advance.

A capacity crowd of 25,000 will see two of four leading contenders in the world in action and only limited facilities prevent the crowd from swelling to well over 100,000, Kirsch said.

"Outdoors," he said, "the show would surpass the Schmeling-Neusel bout."

Schmeling won that one by a knockout and is regarded in Germany as the outstanding fighter in the world, and needing only a crack at Baer to prove it.

Kirsch refused to guess what Baer and Schmeling would draw, because bouts held on such a scale are new in Germany, but he is confident that no country could attract a higger throng.

Schmeling Stimulated Interest.

"The rise of Schmeling to the championship and general growth of interest in boxing since the war," Kirsch said, "have contributed to what now is a frenzy, heightened by excellent business conditions and fewer unemployed than at any time since the war."

The fact that Baer is part Jew would not have any bearing whatever on the fight, according to Kirsch.

Kirsch said that he would seek to line up several boxers while he was here, including Bob Olin, world light heavyweight champion, for a match in Berlin with Adolf Heuser, the German who campaigned in America for a long time.

"What treatment," the reporter asked, "can the American boxers expect from officials. That is, will they be given a square rattle in the ring?"

"You can rest assured," Kirsch replied, "if Hamas beats Schmeling, Hamas will get the decision."

Mt. Rainier Adds To Lead in County

Rallies to Triumph Over Hyattsville, 33-29.

Mount Rainier High School took a firmer grip on first place in the Prince Georges County Scholastic League last night by defeating Hyattsville High, 33 to 29, before a large crowd in the Mount Rainier Gym.

Hyattsville led at the half, 16-13, but the home team, led by Tilly Scott, center, came back to wipe out the lead and go on to win in the final quarter. Clint Quantrille, Hyattsville center, scored 21 points.

In a preliminary game the Hyattsville Alumni trounced the Mount Rainier Grads, 31 to 18, staging a big spurt in the last half to draw away after leading only 12-10 at half time.

The Hyattsville High Junior Team took the lead in the younger division of the county series by drubbing the Mount Rainier youngsters, 20 to 7, at Hyattsville in the afternoon.

Wheat Jumps On New Cold Wave Reports

Cotton Prices Irregular; Closes From 1 to 3 Points Lower.

Chicago, Jan. 25 (AP).—With a new cold wave sweeping in from Canada, the wheat market late today made upward jumps, official reports showing the domestic winter crop unprotected.

Indications were emphasized that material damage to wheat crops had resulted from recent preceding waves of low temperatures. Advices were also that domestic interior mills, elevators and warehouses, reported stocks of wheat on hand totaled less than average.

Wheat closed firm at the day's top quotations, one-half to seven-eighths above yesterday's finish, May 97⅜-½, corn unchanged to one-half higher, May 84⅞-85, oats ⅛-⅜ up, and provisions unchanged to 7 cents off.

In something of a flurry at the last, not a few previous sellers of wheat made haste to switch their market position to the purchase side. Commission house buying, too, in the late dealings was notably augmented, with attention given to general lack of an adequate snow blanket in the United States winter wheat belt. Furthermore, cables were at hand telling of broadening demand for wheat at Liverpool, and saying latest deliveries of Australian wheat were disappointing as to quality.

Trade authorities estimated the new Australian wheat yield as promising to total but 120,000,000 to 125,000,000 bushels. This is smaller than recent forecasts, and compares with 174,000,000 bushels last year, as well as with 212,000.000 the year previous.

Cotton Market

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—Cotton fluctuated within a range of 5 to 8 points during today's trading, with early declines followed by partial recoveries on trade buying or covering. May contracts, after selling off to 12.50 at the opening, advanced to 12.55 and closed at 12.53, with the general market steady at net declines of 1 to 3 points.

Near months were relatively easy under liquidation in early trading, with March selling off to 12.44, or about 8 points net lower, while July worked down to 12.49 and October to 12.42, making net losses of about 4 to 7 points. Reports confirming recent advices concerning reductions in Indian crop estimates may have brought in a little buying on the decline and there was some further buying here through houses with Far Eastern connections.

This absorbed the offerings and the market worked up a few points when contracts seemed comparatively scarce and prices were responsive to small orders either way. March sold up to 12.50, July to 12.55 and October to 12.47 which carried the market back to nearly yesterday's closing quotations and a little more trade buying was reported in the late trading. Last prices were within a point or two of the best for the day.

Trading in the current January position ended at midday following some further liquidation. That delivery sold off to 12.35 during the morning but the last sale was at 12:40. The comparatively small volume of general business was again attributed largely to the disposition to await developments in Washington particularly in the gold clause cases.

Exports today 6,463 making 2,888,534 so far this season. Port receipts 12,041. United States port stocks 2,916,585.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil closed steady at 1 point higher to 1 point net lower today on sales of 19 contracts. Incentive to trade was lacking with the industry now waiting the Supreme Court decision on gold, the same as practically all other commodity markets.

Scattered demand for May and July from Wall Street houses at the end of the session rallied the market from early lows of around 6 to 7 points, brought about by the disappointing action of lard. Bleachable spot nominal; January closed 10.90; March, 11.05; May, 11.10; July, 11.12.

Accumulated Statistics On World Wheat Production Are Rapidly Causing Revision of First Estimates, Observer Says.

New York, Jan. 25.—Accumulating statistical evidence is obliging the wheat trade steadily to revise earlier estimates of the extent to which the world wheat export agreement, control measures by countries such as the United States, and crop shortages caused by drouth have improved the position of the grain. In fact, some observers now question whether any appreciable improvement at all will be effected during the current crop year in the world statistical picture.

During the crop year ended July 31, 1934, production proved considerably larger than was originally expected. Even more serious was the further decline in world consumption of wheat, caused both by the depression and the high prices on the grain brought about by artificial measures in a number of countries. Such high prices stimulated the consumption of substitutes. Whereas, before the war, there was a normal annual increase in wheat consumption, the trend has now been downward for several years, and probably continues so at the present time.

The Food Research Institute at Stanford University, a leading authority on the wheat situation, currently estimates that world wheat stocks rose nearly 45,000,000 bushels during the preceding year.

As a result, on August 1, 1934, the beginning of the current crop year, stocks were at an all-time record of 1,141,000,000 bushels.

Downward Trend in Consumption Held a Main Factor.

Available evidence indicates that the downward trend in consumption continues through the current crop year. While a shortage of other feedstuffs is causing more wheat to be fed to live stock, especially in the United States, this factor appears too small to affect the situation substantially. Since August 1, furthermore, the Southern Hemisphere countries, Argentina and Australia, have been shipping their wheat at a rapid rate into European markets. As a result, Canada has failed to retain her share of the world market.

For the first four months of the current crop year Canada shipped abroad only 75,000,000 bushels of wheat. Accordingly, it appears doubtful that the Dominion will be able to export 280,000,000 bushels during this crop year, as has been estimated by Broomhall, the wheat statistician. In trying to do this Canadian exporters have been tending to depress world market prices and it has even been rumored that export subsidies may be given by the government to push sales. This has been officially denied, however.

Exports to the United States may be of some aid to Canadian exporters during the next few months. The United States always buys a certain amount of special types of wheat not rasied in sufficient abundance here. This year, due to our crop shortage, demand for Canadian durum wheat has been exceptionally heavy and more than the usual quantity will be needed. Offgrade wheat has already been coming in for feed purposes under tariff concessions. But it is not likely that such movement will be important enough to save the Canadian situation.

Little Likelihood of Carryover Reduction Is Indicated.

The world wheat carryover probably will not be reduced this year, therefore, despite the widespread drought and the remedial measures taken. Instead, there has been merely a shift in the identity of the holders of the surplus, with Canada the chief sufferer. In the meanwhile, news about the next crop indicates that, without a rise in consumption, a further expansion in world wheat stocks looms for the coming crop year.

The Department of Agriculture estimates fall wheat sowings in 11 important producing States, including the United States and the larger Danube countries, at 82,512,000 acres, as compared with 78,559,000 last year. Dispatches to the department, moreover, indicate that the European crops have made an exceptionally good start.

The United States, protected by a 42 cents per bushel tariff wall, is not immediately concerned by the unbalanced wheat situation abroad and the resulting darkened price prospects for the grain. However, when we abandon reliance upon crop control, or whenever an unexpectedly large crop yields any surplus here, the depressed state of the world wheat market will tend to depress quotations in our own markets severely.

It is evident that a new approach to a solution of the world wheat situation is urgently needed. France, by abolishing price fixing and trading restrictions recently, has pointed the way. If other countries would similarly take measures to encourage a revival of wheat consumption among the masses of the population, through establishing again a normal relation between prices of wheat and of other bread grains, the situation could be ameliorated.

Foreign Markets.

(Associated Press.)

London—Trading on the stock exchange was firmly active today. The feature of the session was the strength in gilt-edged securities owing to renewed support. Kaffirs, oil shares and foreign bonds were firmer, while West Australian gold mining shares and rubber issues eased. Transatlantic issues were uncertain. The market closed irregular.

Paris—Encouraged by the proposed plan to raise money by discounting Treasury bonds, prices led by rentes improved on the Bourse today. Gold mining and oil shares were strong. The market closed firm.

Berlin—The cabinet's decision regarding the conversion plan to reduce interest payments influenced prices on the Boerse favorably today. A general improvement was recorded and the market closed steady.

Bond Market Turns Mixed as Sales Increase

Utilities and Industrials Up as Railroads Slide; Trading $12,184,000.

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—The utilities and scattered industrials continued to push forward in today's bond market, but the rails were not so sure of themselves and moderate losses prevailed in this division.

Transfers totaled $12,184,000, par value. The Associated Press average for 10 selected utilities advanced .47 of a point, that for 10 industrials was up .25 and the composite of 10 low-yield bonds showed a gain of .01. The average for 20 rails yielded .07 of a point.

Except for a better feeling all around for power company loans, based probably upon talk that the Administration and utility leaders might reach a compromise if rates are lowered, there was little news to stimulate the list.

Federals at New High.

A number of U. S. Government securities edged up to new highs, but the turnover here amounted only to about $2,700,000 and peak prices were shaded before the close.

Gains ranged from one-thirty-second to eleven-thirty-seconds of a point, the latter being recorded by Home Owners Loan 2¾s at 98.27.

Among coroporation gainers of major fractions to a point or more were Colon Oil 6s at 48, Container 5s at 87, Gould Coupling 6s at 28, Laclede Gas 5½s at 69⅝, Nassau Electric 4s at 58½, New Orleans Public Service 5s at 67½, Niagara Shares 5½s at 68¼, Otis Steel 6s at 89, Paramount-Publix 5½s at 65¼, Portland General Electric 4½s, at 60, Richfield Oil 6s at 31¼, and Tennessee Electric 6s at 97.

Foreign Section Quiet.

The foreign section was quiet and slightly mixed. Bonds of Germany, Copenhagen and Rome City improved.

The Argentines sagged and the Brazilians did not respond emphatically to advices that a financial delegation from the South American Republic has entered into consultation with the State Department.

Steel Center For Ingot Yield Placed in Ohio

Industry Trails Population in Westward Course Across Nation.

New York, Jan. 25.—The geographic center of ingot capacity of the steel industry in the United States is in Crawford County, Ohio, north and west of the town of Crestline, according to a calculation made by the American Iron & Steel Institute.

Capacity for producing steel ingots by the Bessemer and open hearth processes is evenly distributed around this point, which is the center of gravity of the steel industry. The great concentration of capacity in Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio is balanced by the capacity on the Pacific Coast, some 2,500 miles westward, and by the mills in the Chicago district.

Since 1874, the earliest year for which the institute finds records available, the center of the steel industry has moved steadily toward the West. Since 1913, the westward movement has been along a nearly straight line across Ohio.

This westward movement of the center of the steel industry closely resembles a similar shift of the center of population of the country. Since 1870, the center of population has moved 190 miles to the west, from a point 48 miles east of Cincinnati to a location in Greene County in the southwestern part of Indiana. The center of the steel industry, as reflected in ingot capacity, has shifted more rapidly by traveling westward approximately 350 miles from its location in central Pennsylvania since 1874.

Building Here Shows Slight DecemberDrop

Washington Ranks Third in U. S. for Estimated Construction.

By Karl von Lewinski.

Building operations in the City of Washington during December decreased slightly below the November figure.

The estimated total of 317 building permits which were issued here in the last month of 1934 placed sixth in the entire country, according to a survey made public yesterday by the Department of Labor. During November, Washington stood fourth among the 764 representative cities covered by the report.

New York again led the list with a total of 2,148 permits for buildings valued at $4,023,994. San Francisco was next with 1,236 permits for an aggregate of $1,099,336 in construction. Baltimore, Boston and Miami follow in the order named.

Third in Money Estimate.

In estimated money totals of building construction during December, Washington retained third place with a total of $959,726. This was ahead of Baltimore, Miami and Boston, but lagged behind the New York City and San Francisco totals.

Cost of Settling Estate.

What it costs to die, in the way of inheritance levies, is surveyed by Bernhard F. Dunn, president of the Estate Recording Corporation in the current issue of Trust Companies.

From the average $10,000 estate, the deductions amounted to $2,430, according to Dunn, leaving a net of $7,570 for the heirs.

From estates falling in the $1,000,000 group the deductions averaged $277,000, leaving a net of $723,000. In the $10,000,000 group, the average settlement costs were $4,510,000, leaving a net of slightly less than 55 per cent.

The estates studied were filed in 11 of the largest States and represent the average of the different tax rates.

As an indication of increases in the Federal estate tax, to be expected during the current year, Dunn cites an estate that had been probated in 1930. Of a total legacy of $8,149,961, the Federal estate tax claimed $169,702. Under recent legislation the Federal tax on this estate would be computed at $2,196,604. In addition there would be the executor's fee, as well as State and other levies.

Kingdom of Hungary Bonds.

Trustees of the state loan of the Kingdom of Hungary, 1924, have been informed that the Hungarian Government has provided foreign currencies to meet 50 per cent of the interest due February 1, 1935.

Speyer & Co., American fiscal agents, were informed that for the balance, Pengo treasury bills of the government have been deposited to the credit of the trustees with the National Bank of Hungary.

As directed by the trustees, the American fiscal agents are prepared to pay to holders of the February 1, 1935, coupons of the dollar bonds, on or after that date, 50 per cent of the stated value appearing on the coupon. The coupons will be stamped as "paid 50 per cent" and returned to the bondholders in order that the claim for the balance may be preserved.

Curb's Prices Close Steady In Light Sales

Power Issues Lead; Trades Increase to 111,000 Shares.

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—Improvement in power and light issues provided the principal interest on the curb exchange today. Dealings remained dull, with numerous stocks closing virtually unchanged.

A drop of 5 points occurred in Singer Manufacturing on a small exchange. United Shoe Machinery yielded a point. Among utilities, Commonwealth Edison rose 2, while American Gas & Electric was up about half as much. Electric Bond & Share Common was steady, but the preferred gained more than a point.

American Cyanamid B and Sherwin Williams were both a shade lower, while Wright Hargreaves, Aluminum Co. of America, Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, Bunker Hill & Sullivan and Swift Internacionale were about even. Hiram Walker gained a large fraction.

Transfers approximated 111,000 shares compared with 95,000 the day before.

Newspapers Gain In '34 Advertising

Volume Is Increased 38 Per Cent From Low Point.

New York, Jan. 24 (AP).—Newspaper advertising registered a 38 per cent increase from its depression low point to the end of December, it is shown by the new index of newspaper advertising published by Printers' Ink today. The December figure stood at 75.4 against a low of 54.5 reached in March, 1933, and was 9.3 per cent above the figure for December, 1933.

The volume of newspaper advertising, says the publication, closely followed the course of general business conditions. From the low in March, 1933, there was a rapid advance to August, then a slackening off until February, 1934, followed by a rapid rise until June, and finally an irregular decline last summer and fall.

The new index is based on the monthly average of newspaper advertising linage for the five years 1928-32 inclusive, with 100 as the index figure.

Dog Instinct.

There is no malice in my pup, and when a stranger ambles up he romps around in glee; and when a neighbor comes to sit, the little bow-wow throws a fit, and climbs upon his knee. The children play with him for hours among the grottoes and the bowers, and never weary him; some dogs delight to bark and bite but this one doesn't think it right to chew a human limb. But there was James B. Winterback who sometimes visited my shack in brave old days of yore; and it was strange how that kind dog would bark until he slipped a cog, until his throat was sore. A maddened creature seemed that pup, the hair upon his neck stood up, his eyes with anger glowed, and he kept frothing at the mouth until James started going south along the homeward road. James Winterback, an honored man, was built upon a goodly plan, and people blessed his name; for anything that helped the town he always put his money down, and won a widespread fame. Men trusted him without a doubt, he was the finest, fairest scout, the country could provide; of all men he was most admired, men sung his praise and never tired, he was the local pride. And yet my aunt would often say, "That idol has his feet of clay, as some day will be seen; he is a cheap and shoddy skate who gains an honest bow-wow's hate, I wist and wot and ween." I wonder was the dog inspired? At least, the man we long admired jumped town between two days and left a lot of people broke who thought he was the squarest bloke that any town could raise.

The end of the season's worst cold spell was forecast last night as the Weather Bureau predicted rising temperatures today. Simultaneously, District of Columbia officials announced that the emergency employment of 5,100 men who had been hired to clear streets out of the ice and snow ended last night. The two-day job cost the town's government about $34,000.

The mercury reached its lowest mark early yesterday, with an official temperature reading of 3.3 degrees above zero at 7 a. m. It should be about 40 today, the Weather Bureau announced, well above freezing.

Ice gnarled the city streets. Only slowly will it thaw, the experts said. Clouds will swathe the warming sun today here and in the neighboring counties. Light winds will eddy in from the west and northwest, a shift from the northeast blows of the last few days.

Late last night a sudden flurry of snow surprised the Weather Bureau. That was just about 10:45 p. m. The weather men looked out the window, said the flurry would be just that, and intimated that possibly there might be another flurry or two today.

Nation Recuperating.

A Nation whipped by storm, flood, and natural disaster was recuperating yesterday. Only in Mississippi and Tennessee did the suffering remain unabated, and there 18,000 persons, fleeing before the flood waters of the Coldwater River, were still seeking homes. Twenty-five persons had died there. Twice protecting levees broke yesterday, and the driving river smashed down homes and buildings in Marks, Miss., and smaller towns. Damage to the stricken area was estimated in the millions, according to a copyrighted Associated Press dispatch.

Red Cross headquarters here dispatched eight national experts to the stricken region, and workers at the scene were distributing fuel and food to refugees housed in box cars, railroad stations, shacks and neighbors' homes. Three thousand blankets were sent to Quitman and Panola Counties of Mississippi.

Even if good weather should continue, the refugees would be homeless another week, Red Cross experts said here.

Damage in Maryland.

Nearer the Nation's Capital, Maryland reported its Eastern Shore still telephonically isolated, as were also Prince Frederick and North Beach in southern Maryland, according to the Associated Press. Telephone company crews were busily at work repairing the damage, estimated at $400,000. Four thousand telephone poles lay by the roadsides.

Baltimore had 1,500 men with 200 trucks at work clearing its streets. Small communities reported record low temperatures, and in Washington County, Chewsville announced a mark of 15 degrees below zero.

In Frederick County, snowdrifts prevented two funerals. One hearse, carrying the body of Jacob N. Barnhouse, killed by a train Wednesday as he worked to remove snow from the tracks, failed to make a trip from Frederick to Point of Rocks, Md. Similarly unsuccessful was the funeral cortege of the late L. Emory Smith, murdered in the recent carbarn hold-up at Chevy Chase. Smith's body remained in Bethesda.

Second Storm Victim.

A second storm victim was announced in Maryland when it was learned that Miss Sadie Wrotem, of Andrews, had been killed Wednesday by a sleet-covered tree which crashed down upon her automobile near Cambridge. Cambridge had been isolated up to yesterday.

Seven inches of ice covered the Chesapeake Bay, marooning boats and water craft, the Associated Press reported. Oystermen at Pooles Island and watermen in the Elk River, Curtis Bay and Spring Garden areas pleaded for help in breaking out their icebound boats.

From Norfolk, Va., the Coast Guard announced that three barges were missing and unreported at sea as a result of the storm. The barge Pattie Morrissett sank with three men aboard, the Coast Guard cutter, Champlain, reported. The others missing are the barge T. J. Hooper and Steel Barge No. 2, of the Eastern Transportation Co.

A special dispatch from Fredericksburg reported that the temperature had dropped to 8 degrees below zero, coldest since the blizzard of 1889. Highways were coated with ice, and five persons were injured in automobile accidents.

Washington's life returned to normal yesterday. Street car service was close to normal almost everywhere. Winter sports embellished the day's program for many residents.

Dr. Walter E. Seymour, 45, of Chevy Chase, Md., was severely cut and bruised as a result of an automobile collision caused by skidding at Thirtieth street and Massachusetts avenue northwest. The force of the collision sent him through the window of his automobile. He was taken to Emergency Hospital.

Worker Injured.

David Pearson, 29, colored, of 71 Defrees street northwest, was shoveling snow into a manhole at Florida avenue and Seventh street northeast last night when an automobile skidded into another car near and rebounded to strike him. He suffered abdominal injuries, and was taken to Casualty Hospital. The driver of the automobile was said to be Joseph R. Taylor, of Landover, Md.

A Sidwell's Friends School bus skidded into a Capital Transit Co. bus at Wisconsin avenue and Dorset drive, Somerset, Md., and a passenger in the school bus suffered a cut over the right eye. The injured passenger, Miss Cary Lucas, of 1733 Twentieth street northwest, was treated by Dr. Benjamin C. Perry, in Bethesda.

A 35-year-old woman slipped on the ice at Wisconsin avenue and M street northwest last night and was taken to Georgetown Hospital with a broken left ankle. She was Miss Mary Dore, 35, of 1024 Wisconsin avenue northwest.

Boy Hurt in Fall.

On his way to school yesterday, a colored boy, Samuel Moses, jr., of 122 F street southwest, slipped on ice at Second and D streets southwest. He was taken to Casualty Hospital and attended for a possible fractured skull.

Winter Sports Here.

There was skating and sleighing all over Washington yesterday. Early in the morning, the National Park Police announced that the Lincoln Memorial Reflecting Pool was sufficiently thickly coated with ice to stand the steel gliders, and scores skated there until the rink was closed and the lights were taken down at 11 p. m. This morning an announcement will reveal whether skating can continue.

Sled and ski runways in Rock Creek Park were utilized by hundreds of sportsmen and their ladies.

And with the usual ironic note, the United Press reported sticky weather and a temperature of 30 degrees above zero in Little America.

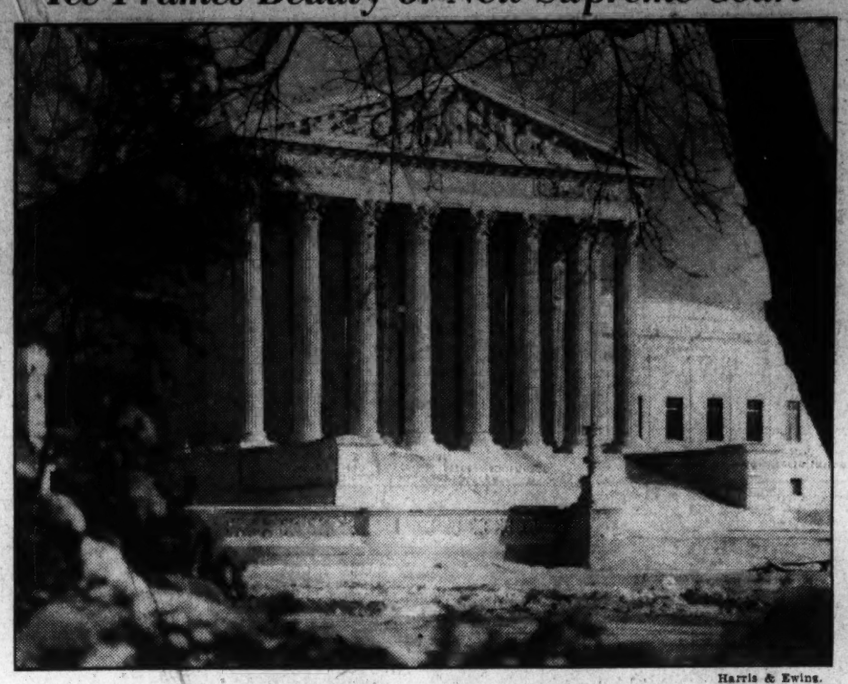
Services Set Today For Henry B. Peffers

Funeral services for Henry B. Peffers, 60, investigator with the Bureau of the Budget, who died Thursday at his home in Cherrydale, Va., will be held today at 2 p. m. in Joseph Gawler's funeral chapel. Burial will be at Aurora, Ill.

Mr. Peffers died after a long illness. He was born in Scotland in 1874, and came to the United States as a young man. He was prominent in Masonic circles.

Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Katharine Ely, of Cherrydale, and six brothers and sisters, all of Aurora.

Ice Frames Beauty of New Supreme Court



Harris & Ewing.

Framed by ice-jeweled shrubbery, the new United States Supreme Court Building appeared to be even more beautiful yesterday decorated with snow.

Prompt Action Is Promised On Civil Service

Sen. Logan's Bill Would Extend Benefits to Emergency Units.

Early action on the Logan bill to extend the civil service to the governmental emergency units was promised yesterday as Senator Bulow, chairman of the Senate Civil Service Committee, appointed a subcommittee to hold hearings.

Senator Logan (Democrat), of Kentucky, sponsor of the measure, was named chairman of the subcommittee, and Senators Dietrich (Democrat), of Illinois, and White (Republican), of Maine, were named members. Hearings probably will be reported to the Senate as soon as possible.

A similar bill, sponsored by Representative Sirovich (Democrat), of New York, is pending before the House Civil Service Committee, but it has not been assigned to a subcommittee.

The Logan bill puts "all positions in the executive civil service which are not now subject to the provisions of the civil service act and rules * * * in the classified service of the United States within the meaning of the act of March 27, 1922."

Exemptions are made of such positions as the President excepts by executive order and of positions subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Incumbents of the New Deal agencies "may acquire a classified status only upon recommendation by the head of the appropriate agency, subject to non-competitive test of fitness by the Civil Service Commission under regulations to be promulgated by the President," the bill states.

Glass Workers' Strike Hitting 4,000 Is Called

Men in Pittsburgh Plants Walk Out as Others Plan to Negotiate.

Cleveland, Jan. 25 (AP).—Flat glass workers employed in Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. plants will go on strike at midnight tonight, the union's national wage committee said late today, while negotiations will be resumed tomorrow with the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co.

Glen W. McCabe, president of the glassworkers' federation, announced that the committee decided to reopen its conferences with Libby-Owens-Ford independently of the Pittsburgh company.

Approximately 4,000 union men will be affected by the strike, McCabe said. They already have their "instructions," he added, among them being advice "to picket the plants and use all peaceful resources at their disposal to prevent anyone from ignoring the strike call."

Arbitration Resumes Today.

Further negotiations with the Libby-Owen-Ford Co. will be taken up at 10 a. m. tomorrow at Toledo, McCabe said.

The union leader predicted the strike would hamper automobile production within three days through a shortage of window and safety glass.

At Detroit, however, automobile plant officials said reserves of glass have been built up in anticipation of the strike, and would permit full production of autos to proceed for at least two or three months.

Officials of Libbey-Owens-Ford, which has been operating at full capacity with four 6-hour shifts, said their reserve stock of automobile glass was at a minimum. Stock on hand, they explained, consists of large sheets which would have to be cut and polished before shipping to motor car manufacturers.

Can Not Believe They Will Strike.

David H. Goodwillie, executive vice president of Libbey-Owens-Ford, said, "I can not believe that our men, who signed a contract which does not expire until next November, will walk out."

McCabe admitted that the union contract runs until November 1, 1935, and contains a provision against modification except by mutual consent, but he said another provision provides for negotiation of union requests.

At Pittsburgh's plants in Ford City and Creighton, Pa., officials were preparing for a strike and ordered that no glass pots be filled. H. S. Wherrett, president of the company, declined to comment.

The Pittsburgh company also has a plant in Crystal City, Mo. Libbey-Owens-Ford plants are in Toledo, Ottawa, Ill., and Shreveport, La.

Smithsonian Gets Species of Piranha

Man-Eating Fish Caught in the Amazon Country.

The Smithsonian Institution has announced the acquisition of several members of the piranha family, which it describes as "perhaps the most dangerous fish extant."

Native to Brazil, these man-eaters and their predatory habits were described by Theodore Roosevelt in his account of his South American travels. He told of a man whose fully clothed skeleton was found in a piranha-infested river. The victim apparently had fallen overboard and the fish had gotten under his garments without disturbing them and slashed away the flesh.

Although some species are only 16 inches long, even these have strong, sharp teeth, and a swimmer attacked by a school of them would soon be consumed.

The Smithsonian piranhas are part of a collection made by B. A. Krukoff, who has just returned from the Amazon country. He sent some of his specimens to the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

Coal Man Fined For Dead Horse

For want of attention a horse was killed and his master, Herman Woodfolk, colored, was fined $10 in Traffic Court yesterday.

Woodfolk is a coal man. Several days ago his horse-drawn wagon was parked near Sherman avenue and Euclid street northwest, while he unloaded coal. A fluttering scrap of paper frightened the horse and he bolted. Two trucks were in the way and the horse struck them head-on. The horse was badly injured and a policeman shot him.

Yesterday, charged as the owner of an "unattended horse," Woodfolk was arraigned before Judge Isaac R. Hitt. Judge Hitt fined the coal man $10, warning him that a horse standing on the street must either be tied or "attended."

Workman Succumbs To Year-Old Injuries

Injuries received nearly a year ago when he fell 22 feet from scaffolding at the new Archives Building proved fatal yesterday to George Washington, 27, colored laborer.

Washington died in Emergency Hospital. He suffered a fractured back and internal injuries in the fall last February. Complications following several operations caused his death, physicians said.

Unemployment Drives D. C. Visitor to Suicide

Despondent because of unemployment, Walter Mannick, 41, ended his life by inhaling gas in the closet of his room in the 900 block of Twelfth street northwest yesterday.

Mrs. Minnie Boykin, proprietor of the rooming house, discovered the body. She said Mannick came to Washington from Wisconsin Monday looking for work. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald was notified.

DeathTollRises As Delta Flood Roars to South

25 Known Dead, 18,000 Homeless; Workers Fear 'Flu' Epidemic.

(Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.)

Marks, Miss., Jan. 25.—Red Cross workers cut lanes through ice tonight to reach marooned and suffering victims of an unprecedented North Mississippi Delta flood, while residents in at least a dozen towns south of here prepared to meet racing torrents of the Coldwater River.

At least 25 lives already have been claimed by the ravaging waters and approximately 18,000 other persons were isolated and homeless.

As the crest of the river moved southward some relief was given the stricken Coldwater Valley, where the river burst from its banks without warning. Levees broke below here bringing succor to a 20-mile area, including Tunica, which has been in the grip of the rampaging flood waters since Monday night.

Valley Waters Recede.

As the thousands in the Coldwater Valley breathed more easily with recession of the swirling waters in that sector, their neighbors to the south in the Tallahatchie Basin prepared to fight almost certain inundation of the opulent farmlands and small plantation homes.

That section south of the point where the Tallahatchie feeds into the Coldwater River appeared likely to bear the brunt of the new onslaught. In this section are situated the prosperous towns of Crowley, Lambert, Glendora, Swan Lake, Sumner and Webb.

Their citizens are familiar with the ravages of flood. Less than three years ago the Tallahatchie Basin suffered tremendously from overflow waters of the Tallahatchie River which ran rampant over a network of levees.

Ice Hampers Workers.

Red Cross workers still were hampered considerably by ice through which lanes had to be cut before rescue boats could pass.

They centered their efforts on care of the refugees. An increasing number of influenza cases gave rise to fears of an epidemic. Hundreds were suffering from exposure and inadequate housing, nursing and medical facilities all lent to the seriousness of the situation.

The Red Cross estimated the number of persons forced to evacuate their homes at 18,000. Officials declined to fix a death figure, but many believed it would exceed the 25 known deaths.

F. H. Anderson, Illinois Central trainmaster, who has surveyed the entire area, said tonight that "it is impossible to hazard a guess as to the number of lives lost throughout the area."

It was impossible to obtain a property damage estimate, but landowners and relief officials ventured guesses that the figure would run into the millions.

New Earth Slides Harass British Columbia Area

Seattle, Jan. 25 (AP).—Fresh earth slides, new inundations and more rain harassed western Washington and British Columbia today, while thousands toiled to repair the damage inflicted by a long siege of storm and cold.

A dozen cities and towns, including Vancouver, British Columbia, were isolated. More than 50 families were marooned in the Olympic Peninsula area of Washington. Telegraph and telephone lines were tangled.

A half-dozen bridges had been smashed and carried away by floating ice and logs. Highways were blocked by great masses of mud or sheets of water as deep as 3 feet in places.

Forest service stations reported 32.3 inches of rain—nearly 3 feet—fell in the Lake Quinault area of the Olympic Peninsula in 88 hours. A landslide there covered 35 acres.

Danger to shipping was believed over as the gales blew away, but the storm left 10 vessels damaged or sunk, 13 deaths attributed to the weather, and damage that could not be estimated because of crippled communication lines.

New Gun Story Is Told by Mais

Brought to Jail in Paper Bag by White Man, Killer Asserts.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 25 (AP).—A new story of how he and Walter Legenza got the two pistols with which they shot their way out of the Richmond City Jail last September was told by Robert Mais today.

Philadelphia officers, who came here to interview the two condemned gangsters as to their alleged part in other crimes, particularly the Weiss kidnaping, were reticent about their conversations.

But, Acting Lieutenant O. D. Garton, of the Richmond police force, said Mais told him the pistols were smuggled in by a white man who was visiting another prisoner in the jail.

This contradicted a previous statement attributed to Mais by New York police and Federal agents who said he told them the late "Squire" R. C. Duke, jail guard, who committed suicide after the escape, had brought in the pistols.

The official theory here, that the weapons were delivered in a sealed can purporting to contain roast chicken, also was contradicted by Mais' latest statement that the jail visitor brought in the pistols in a brown paper bag.
